Nam to the Beach: 'the perfect child'

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

When Nguyen Lan arrived in the Aragona Village home of Robert and Mary Anne Goodwin, it was Christmas Day.

Robert Goodwin remembered that Lan was very withdrawn at first, but he said they involved her in the family activities right away. Mary Anne said her sons and her husband actually picked Lan up and brought her out to the festivities.

Lan came from Vietnam to the Goodwins through Connections, a long-term foster care program for refugee children. According to Gall Peters, senior social worker for the program, most of the foster children in Virginia Beach are either Vietnamese or Amerasian—children of Asian women and American soldiers.

But Mary Anne said the family doesn't consider Lan a foster child—she is part of the family. "We think Lan is the perfect child," she said. "We just call her Lan Goodwin."

"She's just been a doll," Robert said.

"We think Lan is the perfect child."—Mary Anne Goodwin, foster parent to Nguyen Lan.

But Mary Anne added that she thinks Lan is getting a little spoiled.

Lan said she enjoys being part of the Goodwin family. In fact, she refers to Mary Anne as

"mom."

Lan still has an uncle living in Vietnam, and a brother, who in September, came to the United States. Her natural mother is dead, according to Mary Anne, and Lan doesn't know her father.

In addition to Lan, the Goodwins also have four other children, including an adopted daughter, who was 18 months old when she came to the family from Korea.

Robert credits his other children with helping Lan adjust and with breaking the language barrier. He said when he had difficulty understanding what Lan wanted, the other children usually were able to figure it out.

Now, Lan speaks English quite well, in a soft voice. In fact, she has received honors in her English as a second language course at Bayside High School. She said she did not find learning English very difficult.

Lan said although America seemed different at first, she said she doesn't think there is much difference between the two cultures now.

But Mary Anne said the food and the clothes were a big adjustment for Lan. Robert said Lan also used to listen to Vietnamese music and watch Vietnamese movies quite often.

Lan said she will probably not go back to Vietnam. According to Peters, children like Lan would not be allowed to return. Peters said Amerasians are considered outcasts, and the Vietnamese government is anxious to

Out of Luck? Holiday program helps the needy

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

A week before Christmas, a father comes home to his family with a pink slip in his hand. He has been laid off work, and without his paycheck, there may not be a Christmas meal.

This situation is one of many that the "Holiday Project" program, sponsored by the Virginia Beach Department of Social Services, deals with, according to Eileen Stevens, head of the program.

Volunteers work from October through December, organizing food baskets to bring to needy people for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Stevens said most of the families the program serves are ones that have some unexpected problem and cannot provide necessities. For example, she said the family breadwinner might have an accident or a health problem and not be able to work.

Or there may have been a separation or divorce in the family, and the parent can't meet the children's needs.

Senior citizens, especially seniors living alone, are also potential candidates for the program. "These are people who are living on $200 or $300 a month," she said.

However, the program only serves Social Service clients, according to Stevens.

Potential food sponsors are contacted, and matched with needy families and individuals. Stevens said each donor can provide for just one family, or take several families.

Hebe Hawer, coordinator for the program, said the biggest group of sponsors are from local churches, followed by businesses,

School board candidates present views to city

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Citizens will be given an opportunity to voice their opinions on Virginia Beach School Board appointments at a public hearing Thursday at 2 p.m. in the city council chambers.

The public hearing is required by state law.

From the nominations which may be made at Thursday's hearing and the ten candidates interviewed by city council last week, the council will appoint three school board members to fill the seats in the Virginia Beach Borough, now occupied by Robert H. Callis; the Bayside Borough, now occupied by William M. Gantner; and Princess Anne Borough, now occupied by Norris Shirke.

For the first time, council used a public forum to interview the candidates last Monday afternoon. However, the session, in which each candidate was given 15 minutes, attracted little public interest.

Other than council members, three of whom were absent, and reporters, only one or two other persons were present at any one time to hear the interviews.

The candidates were:
• Dr. Joshua Edwards, Robert W. Hall and Alan W. Fulmer for Princess Anne Borough.

• Clelia Freeman, Ernestine Middleton, Linda Williams, Dr. Boyd Jones and Dr. Gordon C. Buiner for Bayside Borough.
• Dr. Richard Bartley and Gerald Gibbs for Virginia Beach.

Following the interviews,

Mayor Robert G. Jones said that the quality of the candidates was "just splendid," and demonstrates the wealth of talent in the community.

Council will make appointments on Monday, Dec. 15 following an executive session.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said she appreciated the indulgence of council in holding the public interviews which she suggested, and said the same procedures may be used for other appointments.

City Clerk Ruth Smith said her office sent letters to 29 persons whose names were listed in the talent bank. The talent bank lists persons interested in serving on city boards or commissions.

Candidates gave brief statements after which they were questioned by council.

Some of the concerns of the council were the role of the school board in relation to council and to the superintendent; criteria for appointment of a new superintendent of schools; school discipline; educational priorities, and the willingness of board members to justify various line items in the school budget.

The candidates spoke of fiscal responsibility, cutting out unnecessary expenses, educational philosophies, and a willingness to serve. A woman candidate said that more women are needed on the school board.

Of the ten, three were women, all from the Bayside Borough.

A sketch of the candidates follows:

Election of Constitution delegates remembered

On Dec. 4, 1786, the General Assembly of Virginia elected seven delegates to the Federal Convention, later called the Constitutional Convention.

Princess Anne County, now Virginia Beach, was represented at that session of the General Assembly, which opened the Richmond Oct. 15 and completed its work Jan. 11, 1787, by John Thoroughgood, Jr. and John Hancock.

Virginia had led the way for reform of the Articles of Confederation by calling for the Annapolis Convention to discuss im-

City officials present new Congressman with city problems

Virginia Beach City Council members and staff members met with Congressman-elect Owen Pickett at a recent breakfast meeting to bring Pickett up-to-date on federal issues facing the city.

One important concern brought up by city officials was receiving funding from the federal government for various sand replenishment projects going on in the city.

Mayor Robert Jones said the city had been promised sand from a recent dredging at Thimble Shoals, but was told the sand was not beach quality and would be dumped offshore. He said the city is afraid of something similar happening with other projects, and wants Pickett's support in Congress.

Other beach protection concerns involved building a breakwater for a hurricane protection project along the Boardwalk, and having more sand for beach nourishment projects.

Pickett told council members he wants to work closely with the Virginia Beach City Council during his term.

Sun Series Ridglea league stands up for neighborhood

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

This is the eleventh in a series of articles about the Council of Civic Organizations and member civic leagues.

The 121-home community, bounded by Princess Anne Road and Parliament and Leeburg Drives, and served by the Ridglea Civic League is small, but close-knit, according to league president Al Leon.

"We're very fortunate, because that little neighborhood is self-contained," he said. "It's a very social kind of neighborhood."

In fact, Leon said that the civic league was formed in 1969 to oppose a townhouse being built in the area. He said residents feared the townhouse would impose on sewage, traffic and schools for the community.

For four years, he said, the league was successful in preventing development, but eventually, the townhouse was built. One of the results of that townhouse, and others built in the area, according to Leon, was overcrowding in the nearby school, resulting in Ridglea students having to take a bus to another school.

He said the civic league has been very active in opposing multiple-family dwellings and high-density housing.

Ridglea has also been active in the block security program, Leon said, to keep the neighborhood safe from crime. The league also supports the local fire department and rescue squad.

Social events also play a part in uniting the community and keeping the league intact.

Leon said in the summer the league puts on a block party, closing off one block of the neighborhood and providing games for the children.

In the winter, he said, Ridglea either has a Thanksgiving or a Christmas buffet. This year, the league is having a Christmas party, with turkey, being provided by the league.

Bags filled with candies will also line the sidewalks during Christmas. Leon said this is the third

Feeding Tidewater's hungry

With the holiday season comes bright lights, family gatherings, and for many, an overabundance of good things to eat. But for 350 families, plus many more who go to churches, pantry and soup kitchens for meals, there may not be much to eat this holiday season.

Cindy Creede of the Southeastern Virginia Food Bank, the largest supplier of food to the needy in the Tidewater area including Virginia Beach issued an urgent call. She said this year, the Food Bank would have had to turn away hundreds of people because the bank simply did not have enough to go around.

There still is a need for non-perishable foods, like canned goods and packaged items.

The shortage occurred in part because supermarkets that used to send unsold food to the bank now must send it to reclamation sites.

However, a supermarket in Tidewater and many private groups rallied to the call and provided the needed food, preventing many families from going hungry.

There is a similar food need in Virginia Beach as well.

The Department of Social Services is sponsoring the "Holiday Project," which provided 425 Thanksgiving food baskets and 585 Christmas food baskets last year to needy Virginia Beach residents in the Social Services program.

But donors for the "Holiday Project" are needed. About 300 families were without sponsors at Thanksgiving. Individuals or groups wishing to donate food or sponsor a family for Christmas can call 431-3200.

In addition, the project needs volunteers to help with sorting and distributing the food for the Christmas distribution.

The food will go to senior citizens, the handicapped, and children whose parents have died, are injured, or who cannot provide food for the family.

Although there are many worthy causes to give to around the holiday season, the Food Bank and the "Holiday Project" are two which need more support this year.

With some help, some Virginia Beach residents—and others in Hampton Roads—will not have to choose between "heat or eat."

Keeping toys safe

Christmas is a time of anticipation and fun for Virginia Beach children, especially the joy of seeing new toys left by "Santa" under the tree.

But toys can also be dangerous, causing injury and even death instead of joy. There are several things Virginia Beach consumers may want to look for—and avoid—when buying toys.

According to the National Safety Council, the best toys are ones that have seven important characteristics:

- Toys with smooth, rounded edges.
- Toys that say "non-toxic" on the label.
- Toys that are resistant to shattering or splintering.
- Fire-resistant toys.
- Strong construction that will hold up to a lot of abuse.
- Electric toys with the Underwriters Laboratories marker.

And according to the Virginia Cooperative Extension Service, children in different age groups have different needs.

For infants, toys that squeak, honk and move without batteries are the best. Toddlers need more realistic-looking toys, like replicas of cars, dolls and dishes.

For children between ages three and four, toys do not need to be as realistic, and should be something that can be changed from day to day. Blocks are a good example.

Costumes that allow a child to dress up as police officers, firefighters, or other occupations are also good choices.

Elementary-school children can learn best from board games with specific rules. It is best to apply the rules loosely at first, until the rules are learned. Children should also be allowed to make up new games and new rules.

With the help of these guidelines, Christmas can truly be joyful for Virginia Beach children, and prevent the dangers of unsafe toys.

Virginia death penalty unfair to prisoners

Editor:

This is to request your help in informing and educating Virginia government officials and community leaders about capital punishment, and to ask for your mercy and compassion when it comes to assigning the punishment to prisoners.

I make this request because the selection and use of capital punishment in Virginia is defective and unfair for these reasons:

• Its assignment is arbitrary and capricious, because similar crimes in other jurisdictions or in the same jurisdiction have not resulted in a death penalty proceeding, and because there are no controls, standards, or defenses in the initial conception and selection of these proceedings.

• The selection of the death penalty is at the political and personal interests and prejudices of prosecutors and their staffs. They may be influenced by public pressures or human errors.

Moreover, some prosecutors are known to strongly favor executing prisoners, whereas others are known for judicial reason and moderation, and in some cases mercy and compassion, when it comes to selecting prisoners for death sentences in Virginia. Therefore, who is assigned a death sentence depends more on who the prosecutor is and what his prejudices are than the facts in the case.

• The Virginia criminal justice system's death penalty program by its very nature discriminates against minorities.

Samuel Gross and Robert Mauro of Stanford University have shown that in Virginia, a person who kills a white person is eight to 10 times more likely to be sentenced to death than one who kills a black person.

William J. Bowers and Glenn L. Pierce of the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University found that the race of both the offender and victim had a tremendous impact on the chances that a death sentence would be handed down—"black killers and killers of whites are substantially more likely than others to receive a death sentence."

Some evidence of this discrimination is found in the fact that today, minorities make up over 60 percent of Virginia's death row prisoners.

Also, 83 percent of all the prisoners executed in Virginia have been black, and 73 percent of all those killed in Virginia's electric chair since 1908 have been black.

Virginia has also executed more prisoners and more women than any other state in our nation.

• Since the death penalty is absolute, while its application must always be imperfect, it should not be used, as it is not used in a number of jurisdictions, states, and countries.

At the very least, it should be a very rare punishment for rare crimes, inflicted for overriding reasons of great public interest and only after every procedural safeguard is observed. This is especially not the case in death penalty proceedings in Virginia.

• Criminal justice systems, Virginia's being no exception, are not sufficiently reliable to merit the finality of death.

Some recent news reports showing the unreliability of judicial systems are the case of Hurricane Carter and George Merritt of New Jersey. The literature is full of similar sad examples.

And to rectify the injustice of the few that are lucky enough to be discovered requires years of work by pools of attorneys, as happened in these two cases.

A recent study has shown that even in death penalty cases where the prisoner has been found innocent, it has taken years to have the innocent person released from prison. The guilty person in these cases, for the most part, was never prosecuted for his capital offense.

• The current practice of granting immunity to accomplices in capital cases, in return for their testimony against defendants, is blatantly biased against defendants. The testimony of a witness, whose own freedom and life depends on shifting the blame to someone else, can only be unreliable.

• The current practice of allowing only death penalty advocates to serve on capital juries that determine the innocence or guilt of a defendant, not punishment, ensures that only the most vengeful people serve on such juries.

• Rigid adherence to procedural rules during appeals to death sentences, especially, in following Virginia's contemporaneous objection rule that prohibits the introduction of new evidence or issues, cannot but make a mockery of fairness and justice.

• The lack of review of the whole trial for serious errors by the Virginia Supreme Court ensures unfairness, and explains in part why this unnecessarily over-conservative Court upholds death sentences 87 percent of the time, as compared to the national average of 52 percent, and does so faster than any other state supreme court in our nation.

• Prisoners selected for the death penalty in Virginia receive the "bare bone" minimum of legal assistance, and as a result, are selected to be executed.

This lack of adequate defense in Virginia in capital cases is shown in part by the average $687 fee paid to court-appointed defense counsel for indigent prisoners, the only kind that are selected in Virginia for the death penalty.

This fee is the lowest in the nation. It does not take much to understand that it cannot buy much defense, particularly when prosecutors have almost unlimited resources and financial means to obtain a death sentence.

• Not recognizing the rights of the condemned to appeal their sentence beyond the Virginia Supreme Court shows an innate unfairness in Virginia's prisoner death sentencing proceedings, and a vengefulness that is not necessary.

• Opponents of the death penalty are not allowed to testify at death penalty proceedings or in any way voice their opinions and

Imagination

I have lived most of my life in the world of imagination. I don't mean to say that I'm walking around with my head in the clouds, but I am a very avid book reader, and I have started to write more novels than I care to think about.

As a child, my favorite companion was an invisible black horse I rode to school every day. I had read almost all of Walter Farley's "Black Stallion" stories, so I just adopted his black Arabian as my own. I even wrote a few horse stories, although I had never been on a horse in my life.

In fact, the whole reason why I went into journalism was because I have never wanted to do anything else but write. My basic philosophy about journalism is that everyone has a story to tell, and my job is to get people to tell that story to me.

Naturally, pure journalism is much more factual and straightforward than writing fiction (although some critics of the press insist there isn't much difference), but it is just as exciting to discover a real-life "character" and put his or her story down on paper as it is to make something up.

My mother claims that the first story I ever wrote back in kindergarten showed where I was headed. It was close to Thanksgiving, and the teacher asked us to write about Pilgrims, turkey dinners, and all the other things associated with that holiday.

While the other kids wrote about sitting at the table, eating turkey with their families, I sympathized with the turkey.

In fact, in the story, I was the turkey. It ended with the gory lines, "The farmer cut off my head. I was dead."

I get kidded about that story every Thanksgiving, because my mother always brings it out to show the relatives, in case they've forgotten about it from last year.

But right now, I'd like to share my column with two aspiring young writers in the third grade at King's Grant Elementary School. Their teacher, Mrs. Sandra DeFosses, sent in two stories her students wrote.

I am leaving the stories exactly as they were written, except for putting them in paragraph form.

A Chalkboard?

When I got out of bed and was brushing my teeth, I looked in the mirror and discovered that I had turned into a chalkboard with one mouth, one nose, two eyes, two ears, two legs, and two arms.

I screamed, my mom ran into the bathroom and she screamed, then my dad ran in and he yelled!

My mom asked what happened. I said: "I don't know, I got up, I looked in the mirror and I was a chalkboard."

"Well," said my mom, "You'll still have to go to school."

"What?" I asked. "I'm going to be so embarrassed!"

After I got ready for school, I got on the bus and everybody yelled! I said it was me, they sort of understood, nobody sat by me.

When I got to school, everybody took chalk and wrote on my face!

"Owl! Hey stop that!" Soon I was eating chalk dust. "Gross!"

When I got home, I went to sit down for dinner. When I picked up the fork, and opened my mouth and took a bite, the food tasted like chalk dust again! It was terrible!

OP-ED

By Rob Jones, president, Virginia Beach Education Association

The Virginia Education Association's fall instructional conference focused on the report of the Governor's Commission on Excellence in Education. There have been many public education reform reports generated since the first report, "A Nation at Risk," was published and publicized.

What makes Virginia's report on Excellence in Education especially promising is the fact that the makeup of the commission included the members of the state Board of Education along with other prominent citizens of Virginia.

The leaders in our state, who are in the position to affect the course of public education into the 21st century for Virginia, are the ones who reached a consensus on the reform initiatives that are contained in the commission report.

The remaining factor, funding, lies in the hands of the governor and the General Assembly. At this point in time, Gov. Baliles has been relatively silent on the cost ramifications of the report. Individual General Assembly members have grumbled that the state has other pressing needs in addition to public education.

Hopefully, as the costs for the various proposals are defined and refined, these decision-makers will continue to realize that investments in public education bring jobs and economic prosperity to the state many times over.

What are the major recommendations in the Commission on Excellence in Education report? The report is broken down into six sections.

Breaking the Cycle of Illiteracy and Disparity is the title of the first section.

The commission recommends that Virginia's school divisions provide voluntary developmental preschool programs for 4-year-old children; that literacy tests in reading, writing, and arithmetic be conducted in grade six, with a "Literacy Passport" issued to those who pass and that remedial programs, including summer school, be mandated for students who score in the bottom one-fourth of the tests.

Lifting the Level of Teaching and Leadership, the second section, calls for a rigorous undergraduate degree in an arts and sciences discipline be required for all teachers.

The commission wants education courses to be limited to 18 semester hours. The commission recommends that all colleges and universities review and restructure their programs for educating teachers.

The commission asserts that Virginia must have competitive teachers' salaries that will attract and keep highly-qualified teachers. To further the realization of this goal, the commission wants Virginia to provide financial incentives to school divisions for developing and implementing ways to keep effective teachers in the classroom.

The commission also sees the principal as the most important person in the school. Consequently, they recommend that graduate programs in school administration provide more emphasis on leadership skills and teacher evaluation, as well as an assessment program for all principals applying for re-certification.

The next section is titled Taking Advantage of Technology. The commission calls for the employment of an assistant superintendent for technology to develop and direct a detailed five-year plan to make educational technology an integral part of public education.

Electronic classrooms are recommended to be available to all schools from the state's five educational stations. They recommend that teachers in the middle school grades be provided with a microcomputer for the classroom and instruction.

The commission wants the Virginia Public School Authority to initiate a loan program for providing financing to school divisions for computers, video equipment, satellite transmission receivers, video-disc players, and other technological equipment.

Strengthening the Crucial Link is the fourth section in the report. In this section, the commission recommends that the Department of Education begin immediately to restructure education in the middle schools.

The commission further recommends that all school divisions take measures to reduce their dropout rates, with special emphasis on assisting students in middle school who are potential dropouts.

The final sections of the report, Keeping Score and Being Accountable and Making It Happen, call for the redefinition of the duties and responsibilities of the board of education, the superintendent of public instruction, school boards, superintendents, and principals.

The commission also wants the superintendent of public instruction to identify schools that are exceptional and schools that are educationally deficient. With this recommendation, the commission wants to fund two school grant programs to reward exceptional schools and to help deficient schools.

To ensure that all possible progress is made on its recommendations, the commission calls for an oversight committee to review the efforts of the state in implementing the recommendations of the Commission on Excellence in Education.

In concluding its report, the commission stated, "This report contains guideposts for making Virginia's schools among the very best in the nation. Thomas Jefferson, even prior to his governorship during the American Revolution, wrote, 'that free government rests, as does all progress, upon the broadest diffusion of knowledge...' There are additional reasons that compel us now to exhort Virginians to lift the level of teaching of all of our schools. Our students must be better prepared to live and work in a highly competitive, technological society. Virginia must be able to compete in the national and international marketplace."

"Implementation of the suggestions made in this report will require bold leadership at every level of government in the Commonwealth and at every level of our system of education. But the future of public education in Virginia, in the final analysis, will be determined by the people of Virginia. We believe that a public school system in the first rank of states is within Virginia's reach and that bold action at this time can achieve fulfillment of Jefferson's vision and also prove a wise investment in Virginia's future."

Photos, films wanted of Virginia Beach fires

By Martin Grube, Master Fire Fighter

I have been researching the history of the Virginia Beach Fire Department and have found that photographs are the best method of capturing history than anything else.

Does anyone have any photographs of fires or fire trucks? Call me at 498-8035.

If anyone has taken a video or movies of a fire, I would like to look at it. Also, if anyone has slides or a negative, please call.

The town of Virginia Beach did not become part of the City of Virginia Beach until 1963. All the fire records were either lost or destroyed. If anyone has any history of fires in Virginia Beach, I would like to talk with you.

Has anyone ever been to a fire museum? Almost every large fire department has a museum for the collecting and storing of that department's history. Fire museums are very educational and enlightening.

The nearest museum to Tidewater is in Richmond.

Would Virginia Beach residents like to see a fire department museum built in Virginia Beach? This museum would be dependent solely on private donations.

Please write me and give me your viewpoints on a fire department museum. Martin Grube, 3603 Addison St., Virginia Beach 23462.

Crime Solvers seeks attacker

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers is looking for a man who is wanted for an attempted armed robbery and a sexual assault.

On Monday, July 28, at approximately 5 p.m., a man walked into the Colonial Cleaners in the Fairfield Shopping Center. After inquiring about having a coat cleaned, he attacked the clerk, put his hand over her mouth, and dragged her to the rear of the store.

He had a knife in his hand and told her he was going to rob her. A customer came in the store, and the robber left through the rear door.

Investigators believe this same man is responsible for sexually assaulting a woman in a store in the Providence Square Shopping Center on Oct. 14.

The man detectives are looking for is white, in his twenties, approximately 5 feet 4 inches tall, with a thin build. He has brown hair to his shoulders, brown eyes, and had a strong odor of cigarette smoke.

If anyone has information about this man or any other crime, call Crime Solvers anonymously at 427-0000.

If information is provided that leads to an arrest, a cash reward of up to $1,000 will be given.

No names or court appearances are required to collect a reward.

I hope more aspiring student writers will send their work to The Virginia Beach Sun. Maybe one of the names appearing in The Sun will one day be on the best seller list!

I am less happy to say that as of this week, my writing career with The Virginia Beach Sun will come to an end.

For personal reasons, I decided two weeks ago to hand in my resignation.

I have to say, though, that I have enjoyed writing in Virginia Beach—in fact, I've become very devoted to the city and the people that I have been fortunate enough to work with. In a sense, it's become "my" city, and The Sun has become "my" newspaper.

I also must say that my colleagues and staff members have also been wonderful to work with. It made my decision very hard to make.

Thank you, loyal readers of The Sun, for your support. Thank you my Virginia Beach sources and friends, for your help in making this paper truly a community newspaper in the best sense.

appearance of doing something about violent crime, without having to touch in any way the basic structures and relations in society, which might actually have something to do with these crimes.

Each time a prisoner in Virginia is considered for a death sentence or is executed, many of us recall the words of the distinguished Soviet physicist and crusader for human rights, Andrei Sakharov.

Although strong words, they address some basic issues well: "I regard the death penalty as a savage and immoral institution that undermines the moral and legal foundations of a society."

As a state, in the person of its functionaries, who like all people are inclined to making superficial conclusions, who like all people are subject to influences, connections, prejudices and egocentric motivations for their behavior, takes upon itself the right to the most terrible and irreversible act—the deprivation of life.

Such a state cannot expect an improvement of the moral atmosphere in its country. I reject the notion that the death penalty has any essential deterrent effect on potential offenders.

I am convinced that the contrary is true—that savagery begets savagery."

Thank you for allowing me to bring this serious matter to your attention.

Death penalty has major disadvantages facts in what is a closed judicial system in assigning the penalty.

•There has never been a full and impartial public hearing or inquiry on the establishment and use of the death penalty in Virginia.

•The death penalty in Virginia is only used against the poor and uneducated, and usually against prisoners who are mentally deficient or who have limited intellectual capacity.

•The emotionally-laden aggravating circumstances variables, "future dangerousness" and "vileness" needed to impose death sentences in Virginia mean whatever a prosecutor wants them to mean. They are not defined by any judicial or legal standards or requirements.

And although the American Psychiatric Association prohibits its members from making predictions on future dangerousness because they are so unreliable, Virginia mental health professionals have made, and continue to make, such predictions. The results have sentenced prisoners to death.

Moreover, no expert witnesses are allowed to testify in death penalty proceedings to the association's position that such predictions cannot be made.

•Virginia government officials allow the execution of the mentally ill and of children to the age of 15 years.

Black children as young as 12 years of age have been executed in Virginia. Prisoner Morris Mason, although mentally ill was executed on June 25, 1985. He was reported to be a mentally retarded paranoid schizophrenic with an I.Q. of 66.

•The "willingness of the courts and state governments to expedite proceedings in order to bring about speedy executions" has made it too hard for defendants to appeal errors by judges and by their own lawyers. They are denied an adequate opportunity to present their defenses.

Moreover, the courts have "implemented a scheme in which capital defendants receive less time to present their cases to the court than noncapital defendants." (Justice Thurgood Marshall, New York Times, September 7, 1985).

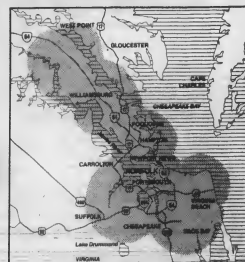

•Local defense attorneys in death penalty cases are not trained or experienced in providing sound and complete legal counsel. They are "unfamiliar with the special rules that apply in capital cases" and "make serious mistakes." (Justice Marshall, New York Times, September 7, 1985).

Moreover, the Commonwealth of Virginia and none of its bar associations have ever taken any steps to educate and train these defense attorneys, so that fair and adequate trials are conducted for prisoners picked for death sentences.

Death penalty proceedings threaten my freedom and liberties and dignity and the democracy I now enjoy because they are a sort of open and public dress rehearsal for the violation of all human rights.

That is, they end in the torture and killing of prisoners under the get them out of the country. Although the Goodwins said they are pleased to have Lan be a member of their family, and happy with the Connections program, they would probably not take in another foster child. The reason, according to Mary Anne, is there just isn't enough room. The Goodwins recently added a second story to their single-story home to accommodate all seven family members.

Peters said families who take in foster children have to undergo a home study program, which includes an interview with a social worker and medical exams for the entire family.

The foster children can stay with the family until they are 18, unless they go on to college or vocational school, Peters said.

Mary Anne said she found out about the Connections program through the Bayside Junior High newspaper.

She said there wasn't any real reason why they decided to be a foster family, except that there was a need for families.

"Actually, what's one more kid?" she said.

The Goodwins also had an American boy stay at their home temporarily, while another family was finishing the home study program.

"They're excellent kids," Robert said of his two foster children. "They're ideal."

year the league has had the candlelit sidewalk, and he said it tends to encourage people to walk around the neighborhood and visit friends.

Most of the community seems to favor keeping the league structure in place, according to Leon.

He said, however, that most of the residents are business or professional people with families, and are usually too busy with those responsibilities to be very active in the league.

About 50 percent of the residents are regular members of the league, but Leon said when the league solicits for members, they can get 75 percent of the residents. He said about 90 percent are listed in the league roster.

Right now, he said the league's main concern is to keep as active as possible.

Recently, the league was involved in the bond referendum and sponsored a petition for direct election of the mayor. Leon said most of the community's concerns have been cleared up since the new city council took office.

city departments, schools and school clubs, hospitals, and the Virginia Beach Jaycees, who are putting on a Christmas party so needy children can shop for presents. Hawver said this year, there has been an increase in the number of individual families who are sponsors.

Stevens said those who do not want to sponsor a family can send in donations of food or gifts. The program also receives food from the school system and canned food drives.

Approximately 800 families and individuals have been referred to the "Holiday Project" this year for just Thanksgiving food baskets. Hawver said. She said about 500 of those families are being helped.

Last year, the program distributed 325 Thanksgiving baskets and 485 Christmas baskets.

Stevens said the goal is to help all the applicants by Christmas, especially those who could not be helped at Thanksgiving.

The program still needs sponsors as well as volunteers, according to Stevens. The program presently has 12 volunteers, who work one day a week for six hours a day.

"They really have been great,"

Hawver said.

The program itself began about 16 years ago. Before then, according to Stevens, social workers just organized things individually to help families they know. She said as the city grew, the project grew too large to be handled individually.

The benefits from "Holiday Project" sometimes extend beyond Thanksgiving and Christmas. Stevens said some of the sponsors keep in touch with the families all year, coming in to lend a hand when they see a need.

In addition, any leftover food is distributed through Social Services for the rest of the winter, she said.

Anniversary of Constitutional Convention remembered terstate commerce.

Based on the report of that meeting, the General Assembly on Nov. 23, 1786 approved an "act for appointing Deputies from the Commonwealth to a convention proposed to be held in the City of Philadelphia in May next, for the purpose of revising the Federal Constitution."

The authorizing act contains interesting language. In its first section, the General Assembly concludes that they "can no longer doubt that the crisis is arrived at which the good people of America are to decide the solemn question, whether they will be wise and magnanimous efforts reap the just fruits of that independence, which they have so gloriously acquired...and to concur in such further concessions and provisions, as may be necessary to secure the great objects for which that Government was instituted, and to render the United States as happy in peace, as they have been glorious in war."

Section II of the act authorizes the appointment by secret joint ballot vote of both Houses of Assembly seven Commissioners, and set a quorum of three to act as deputies from the Commonwealth, to meet with the deputies from other states in Philadelphia.

On Monday morning, Dec. 4, 1786, the House "proceeded by joint ballot with the Senate, to the appointment of seven deputies from this Commonwealth, to a Convention..."

When a committee to examine the ballots returned from the conference chamber, it reported that it had found a majority of votes in favor of George Washington, Patrick Henry, Edmund Randolph, John Blair, James Madison, George Mason and George Wythe.

These seven were officially named deputies to the Constitutional Convention of 1787. Governor Randolph, however, found it necessary in May to appoint Dr. James McClurg to replace Patrick Henry, who declined his appointment.

There has been much speculation about this appointment. While Dr. McClurg was unquestionably a brilliant man, having graduated from William and Mary with high honors at the age of 16, he had absolutely no political experience. In any event, McClurg soon realized that he was ill-equipped for his role, and departed for good in July.

George Wythe also left before the Convention ended. In fact, he went home in June to be with his dying wife, and never returned.

Of the five Virginians who stayed to the end, two—George Mason and Edmund Randolph—refused to sign the final document. There is no record that James Blair ever spoke during the deliberations from May to September, but by adding his name to those of George Washington and James Madison, the necessary quorum of three was met. Thus, the Commonwealth was officially recorded in favor of the Constitution.

Grandparents can give tradition

The gift of traditions is one of the most important that grandparents can pass on to their grandchildren.

"Children like to know where they came from and what happened in the family," said Janette K. Newhouse, a specialist in adult development and aging.

Some special ways to pass on traditions have been around a long time. Many grandparents make and give quilts designed with family handprints, names and birth dates. Others do needlework and samplers.

An album of family photographs is a special way to preserve information by giving it to grandchildren.

Grandparents can write a personal book for their grandchildren. Blank books are available at department and book stores.

"Writing may seem like an overwhelming task, but writing one page per day will fill a book very quickly," Newhouse said.

She suggested that grandparents can write about their own parents and grandparents, sisters, brothers, and other relatives; where they were born and raised; games they played as children; school days, and work experiences.

A topic grandchildren enjoy is learning what their parents were like when they were young.

New electronic recording equipment has opened new ways for grandparents to give their traditions, Newhouse said.

Using a video or tape recorder makes creating oral histories easy. If the story teller wants to change a story, it can easily be erased and redone.

"Some embarrassing, but wonderful, stories may be easier to record than old face-to-face," Newhouse said.

Shoppers packed Pavilion for handmade crafts, stuffed animals

Hundreds of shoppers took advantage of the long Thanksgiving weekend to pack the Virginia Beach Pavilion for the Countryside Shops Craft sale. There were hundreds of craftspeople there, displaying carved decoys, woven wall hangings, baskets, handcrafted and hand-painted purses, belt buckles and other accessories, and quilted items. Stuffed animals are one popular gift this year, and many

School board candidate profiles in math from the University of Pennsylvania. He also has associate degrees in applied science and data processing and accounting from Tidewater Community College and a master's degree in business administration from Golden Gate University.

Hall is a supervisor of records in the micrographics department of the City of Virginia Beach. Hall served in the Navy for 31 years, retiring as a commander in 1974. He teaches business math at Tidewater Community College. While in the Navy, he was executive officer of the Fleet Training Center in Norfolk, which operates 10 schools with a staff of 450.

He and his wife Mary have three children, who attended public schools. All are alumni of Pennsylvania State University. The Halls also have five grandchildren.

Hall is chairman of the board of the Virginia Beach Municipal Employees Credit Union and is a speaker for the United Fund.

He said he believes in strong discipline, that the role of the superintendent is the same as that of the city manager to the city council. He said he is open to greater cooperation between the school board and city council. He emphasized the possible money-saving aspects of the school and city operations.

Dr. Joshua Edwards
Edwards, who attended public schools in Norfolk, received his bachelor of arts degree in biology from St. Augustine College in Raleigh, N.C. He also has a master's degree in counseling education and higher education and a doctorate in higher education administration and counseling education from the University of Pittsburgh.

He is a professor in the education department at Norfolk State University, where he has been associated for close to nine years.

Before his present position, he was dean of students at St. Augustine College and at Edgewood College in Madison, Wis.

He and his wife have three children. His son, who is a graduate of Kellam High School, a daughter who is a student at Green Run Elementary School and a pre-school-aged son.

Edwards has served on the Citizens Advisory Committee for Community Development and as a member of the Virginia Beach Development Corporation. He also served on the faculty senate at Norfolk State.

Edwards believes that emphasis in education should be placed at the elementary level. He said the dropouts come at the high school level, but that students drop out mentally at the elementary level.

He said that teachers are teaching subjects for which they are not qualified. He therefore believes in the team teaching approach in the elementary school with the teachers rotating instead of the students.

Edwards added that every child should not be educated in a particular manner, just as everyone should not be president of the United States.

Edwards believes that the school board should be elected by the people and should be responsible for fund raising.

He said the school board and city council can work together for a common cause, that the school board meeting should be open to the public, and that the new superintendent should be somebody who is willing to compromise.

He said that he has had experience with a budget at Norfolk State and that he would be accessible to the public if elected.

Clelia Freeman
Born in North Carolina, Freeman grew up in Portsmouth where she was graduated from the Woodrow Wilson High School.

She received her bachelor of science in math from Radford College and her master's degree in guidance counseling from the College of William and Mary. She also took advanced studies in school administration at the University of Virginia.

She taught overseas while with her husband while serving in the U.S. Corps of Engineers, at Great Bridge High School in Chesapeake and in Alexandria. In 1958, when the Freemans established their home in Thoroughgood, she taught in Thoroughgood.

She also taught and was a guidance counselor at Princess Anne High School, was a guidance director at Cox High School, and assistant principal at Kempville High School for six years.

She is a member of University Women and of Delta Kappa Gamma, honorary educational fraternity. The Freemans have two sons who attended public schools in Virginia Beach.

She said her concerns are maintaining the quality of education but cutting costs—the program should be reviewed and some programs can be consolidated; to replace the superintendent who has been recognized nationally, is "farsighted, aggressive and hard to replace;" overcrowded schools; drugs; and the increase in teen-aged pregnancies.

She said the school board needs more representation from the education area and more women.

She said she would not mind justifying school board costs to council and as for drugs, she said she needs more background, but that schools can't be everything.

As much as she admired Brickell, she said, she would not necessarily look for the same characteristics in a new superintendent. She said that Virginia Beach is fortunate in that the job is a choice one and the city can look the whole country over.

Linda Williams
Williams, a graduate of Overbrook High School in Philadelphia, attended Montgomery County Community College in Pennsylvania and West Chester (Pa.) State College.

All four of her children are students at the Shelton Park Elementary School.

Her husband is in the Navy. The Williams' have resided in Virginia Beach for four years. She said that her Navy background will fill a void on the school board by introducing special concerns of the children of military personnel who make frequent moves.

Although she is not familiar with state law as it relates to schools, Williams said, "I can learn; I'm available."

In a new superintendent, she said, she would look for ability, honor and respect.

She said the average military family moves 11 to 12 times during the children's school career, and each of their schools has its own standards. She said she would like to represent these families, not to water down the standards.

Dr. M. Boyd Jones
A native of Gloucester, Jones received his bachelor of science degree from Hampton Institute and his master's and doctorate from Cornell University.

He is presently retired, professor emeritus, from Norfolk State University, but teaches one class evenings and tutors in mathematics during the day.

Before coming here in 1964, Jones taught in St. Paul's College, Lawrenceville; Maryland State on the Eastern Shore and Alabama State. He also taught at the high school level in several places.

The Joneses have four children: one daughter, a graduate of Bayside High School who was graduated from Radcliffe, and three sons, all of whom were graduated from Norfolk State University.

The oldest is a major in the Medical Corps, stationed in Frankfurt, the second son is in electronics locally, and the youngest is studying medicine at Meharry.

Jones has been president of his civic league and a member of the Council of Civic Organizations. He received a $10,000 grant from Exxon to do experimental work in math, and believes that youngsters are the ultimate product of the schools.

He believes in pre-school classes, but says that age is not the key.

In answering council's questions, he said that maybe children should be kept at school before and after school hours to provide working parents a place where the children can be supervised, but, he said, that it would depend on the finances and the time available.

Jones had no objections to discussing line items in the school budget with the city council and believes that the superintendent should be one who establishes rapport with his associates and knows what's going on.

Buhrer, a 30-year Navy veteran, believes that the administrative staff for Virginia Beach schools could be reduced and the administrators put back in the classrooms teaching their specialties.

Buhrer, who received his doctorate degree in business administration from George Washington University, has been associated with Old Dominion University for 14 years, five years in the classroom and nine years in administration.

While in the Navy, he served for four years with SACLANT in Brussels.

His wife taught in the elementary schools for ten years and the Buhrers have two children, who graduated from the Virginia Beach school system.

He said his primary goal as a board member would be to improve the schools at the elementary level, from four years through the elementary years, he said, the instruction is almost archaic.

He said that he had a more modern education 40 or 50 years ago. The middle and upper schools, he said, are modern.

He said that it was not fair to expect a teacher to be proficient in 10 or 12 subjects, and that using some of the administrators to teach their specialties would provide more teachers.

Buhrer believes that the great group of average children are not getting attention. He also believes in a platoon system, a kind of team teaching setting, so that one teacher would not have so many subjects to teach.

He said that while some changes may add to the expense, other changes can be made that won't cost anything.

Buhrer said the new superintendent should have had experience in a large school system or his learning time would be too long; should have a broad range of experience in vocational and (class) education, and should be capable of developing programs.

Buhrer, who is now back in the classroom at ODU, said that he teaches three days a week and would be accessible to the public.

Ernestine Middleton
Middleton is a native of Virginia Beach, who graduated from Kempville High School. She has a bachelor of science degree from Madison College, a master's from the College of William and Mary and is enrolled in a doctorate program at Virginia Polytechnic University Institute and State University.

She worked as a school librarian in Virginia Beach for 14 years before she remarried 11 years ago. She has seven children, all of whom attended Virginia Beach schools.

Middleton is treasurer of the Virginia Beach Arts and Humanities Committee, on the Arts and Artists Committee, and was appointed three years ago by the governor to the Virginia Beach Erosion Council.

She also served as parliamentarian of her civic league, secretary and vice president of the Women's Club, and is a member of the University Women. Middleton said her priority would be basic education.

She said that there may be some overlapping of facilities in the city, such as recreation and libraries, and that, as a taxpayer, she was interested in the fiscal responsibility of the school board.

She said the superintendent should have vision and fiscal responsibility. If appointed, she said, she would have to relinquish some of her present activities to serve the board more fully.

Gerald Gibbs
Gibbs, a native of Washington, D.C., is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy and received a master's degree in mathematics from Columbia University.

As an "Army brat," he said, he attended schools all over the country, and after retiring from the Army in 1982 became associated with a local "think tank" system.

He served as chief of combat readiness with SACLANT in Belgium, where his daughter finished high school, and after a two-year assignment with NATO, retired as a full colonel and settled in Virginia Beach.

His career also includes three years of teaching math at West Point.

A daughter is a Phi Beta Kappa at the University of Virginia and a son is a student at Virginia Wesleyan.

He said the superintendent should be a good teacher, so that he or she will understand how hard it is to be a good teacher, and a good manager. His philosophy, he said, is to address both standards and responsibility.

His priority, he said, is to produce good quality students in an area where they can be creative.

He likened the school board to the board of directors of a corporation to provide a system of checks and balances.

Dr. Richard Bartley
Bartley, a native of Norfolk, where he attended public schools, is a graduate of Yale University and received his doctorate from the Illinois College for Optometry.

He and his wife have one daughter, a student at Yale University.

Except for a tour of military duty, Bartley has been practicing optometry for 20 years.

Bartley said that quality education should be available at all levels within the context of fiscal responsibility. He said he hoped that city council did not want to be involved in every decision made by the school board, but saw no problem in explaining line items in the school budget to council.

He said that he takes pride in the city and that teachers are entitled to have representation although he is against labor unions for teachers. He said the new superintendent should come from a system with comparable values.

Alan W. Fulmer
Fulmer, a native of New Jersey, has resided in Virginia Beach for 12 years.

He attended Community College in New Jersey and served in the Army twice. He was a highway patrolman in northern New Jersey, a detective, and a Federal agent.

As a Federal agent, he had covert assignments in the Middle East, Europe and Northeast Africa, and also worked in the Tactical Border Drug Interdiction Program.

When he retired from government service in 1978, he turned his hobby of designing and building custom homes into a career as a builder and developer. He also is a majority stockholder and chief executive officer of Fantastic sunbathing salons.

Fulmer has also served as president of the Lago Mar Civic League, on the Board of Directors of the Council of Civic Organizations, and is an Inter-collegiate Friend of Old Dominion University.

He said the school buildings are under-utilized. He said that with billions worth of physical plants in schools, which are closed most of the time, the city held a bond referendum for a recreation center. Some program might be worked out, he said, where the schools could be used for recreation.

He also cited "grandiose ideas" of the school system, saying that if the people hadn't gotten up and yelled, the city would have Olympic-sized swimming pools in all the schools.

He said that the new superintendent should have experience in budgeting to be able "to trim the unnecessary stuff out." He also rated students as the top priority in schools, followed by teachers, administrators and buildings. He also said he did not believe that any government employee should have the right to strike.

Tips offered on preventing freezing pipes

Freezing pipes are a common problem during the winter months in Virginia Beach, so it's important to take precautions to avoid breakage and flooding.

"Cold weather can mean big headaches and expensive repairs for homeowners who fail to protect their homes from the costly damage caused by frozen pipes that break," said Andrew Lyons, vice president of fire and allied lines for a national insurance firm.

To help homeowners prevent the aggravation and expense of frozen pipes, Lyons offers the following advice:

• Be sure to check on pipes in unheated areas of the home—the basement, crawl spaces, exterior walls and laundry room. These are the ones that are most likely to freeze.

• On particularly cold days, allow inside faucets to drip slowly, and open cabinets underneath sinks to allow heat to reach the pipes.

• Insulate pipes. Special types of insulation are available for pipes at most hardware stores. Consult a plumber or home repair manual for installation guidelines.

• Drain all outside spigots. These are highly susceptible to freezing, since the pipes run through the walls to the outside. To drain, cut off the water at the valve inside the house that controls the spigot. Then open the spigot itself to allow water remaining in the pipe to drain out completely.

• When leaving the house during cold weather, don't turn off the heat completely or set the thermostat too low.

• When planning to be away from the house for several months, shut off the water and drain the house's system. Consult a plumber or home maintenance manual for the proper procedure.

• If heat is lost in the house due to a power failure or similar problem, check the pipes. If the pipes in areas most likely to freeze are not insulated, newspapers can be used as a temporary substitute.

• If there is a persistent problem with a certain pipe freezing, special wiring which provides a low level of heat can be attached to the pipe. Again, consult a plumber or home repair manual.

"The methods of preventing frozen pipes are easy and relatively inexpensive," Lyons said, "so there's no reason why any homeowner should neglect to take such precautions. It's well worth the time and money to take steps now to prevent unnecessary, expensive damage that could result on a cold winter's day if you delay."

Mounted patrol graduates get into formation

Stabilizing Crime

Stories by Greg Goldfarb

If not for Cashvan Arabian Farms, there would be no Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol.

At least that's the consensus of Frank Drew, a lieutenant in the Virginia Beach Police Department and in charge of the city's eight-man mounted patrol, and Jerry Modlin, Cashvan's horse trainer.

Cashvan Arabian Farms, located on Princess Anne Road near the municipal center, has done for free everything from donate to the patrol three Arabian horses, to providing facilities for public ceremonies honoring the patrol's most recent graduating class, to transporting the horses to special events hundreds of miles and back, plus expenses. Usually, for the same services commercial customers would be charged $50 per horse and 50¢ a mile, plus expenses. But since the mounted patrol operates on an annual city budget of less than $20,000 to cover necessities, the Cashvan generosity is greatly appreciated.

In addition, since the patrol's inception in 1984, Cashvan has donated, among other things, gates, tubs and blankets.

"I really don't know why. We never asked ourselves 'why?' Somebody needed help and we helped them."

During severe hurricanes, Cashvan has even opened to the horses its heated stables and large indoor show arena. The

The ongoing working relationship between the police department and Cashvan Farms is a special one, and one which Drew and Modlin agree will

500 arrests affected from horseback; officer envisions day all officers will ride

The Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol currently stands at eight members, all of whom have at least 10 years of law enforcement experience.

They, and their steed's name, are: Lt. Frank Drew, Taurus; Master Police Officer (MPO) Rosemary Larkin, Chief; MPO Bernie Ruby, Raven; MPO Rick Spreder, Tag; Norman Ferguson, Rebel; Ronnie Helms, Lester; Mike Kennedy, Frisbee; and Karl Wesseler, Rocky.

Since the patrol's formation in 1984, according to Drew, around 500 arrests have been made from horseback, and only once has an officer fallen from his mount. That occurred during a chase, but the officer remounted and affected the arrest.

Never, according to Drew, has a mounted police officer hurt a person; received a complaint about the officer's behavior; and per capita,

Beach watercolorist shows work at Humana Bayside in December

Virginia Beach artist Debbie Babia will show a collection of eight watercolors at the Humana Gallery through December 31. The gallery, located in Bayside Humana Hospital, is a satellite space for local art sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

Babia describes her work as "large floral studies" which are reminiscent of the colors and textures of the West, where she was born and raised in San Diego.

Currently, the artist is pursuing a fine arts degree from Tidewater

Community College. In 1984, she was selected as a TCC student to participate in the Arts Center's "New Paint" show, which focused on new, young painters in the area.

The show is free and open to the public. Hours are Monday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Bayside Humana Hospital is located at 800 Independence Blvd. in Virginia Beach.

Changing name is not simple for Cox Cable

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

What was described as a simple name change from Cox Cable Virginia Beach, Inc. to Cox Cable Hampton Roads, Inc., turned out not to be so simple for City Council which turned down the request Monday afternoon by a vote of 7-4.

Franklin R. Bowers, vice president/general manager of Cox Cable Virginia Beach, Inc., told Council the company which has a cable franchise with the city was requesting a simple name change which would save the company taxes under Section 332 of the Internal Revenue Service code.

Under the franchise between the city and Cox Cable, Council would have to approve a resolution consenting to the name change and the transfer of assets to the new corporation.

Council members expressed concerns that the city would lose its identity with the name switch and that its assets would be mingled with those of Norfolk and Portsmouth Cox franchises. Also, while Cox would benefit, the City Council could see no benefits for the city.

Bowers said that the company proposed to substitute the new corporation for corporations in Norfolk and Portsmouth as well as Virginia Beach. He also said that any new name would do the job as well and that New Cox Cable Virginia Beach had been considered.

Randy Blow, assistant city attorney, said that the resolution would have no effect on the franchise agreement of May 1976. The company would still have to maintain a local office for billing and complaints, would still have to maintain the records of the Virginia Beach franchise separately from the other franchises and would still have to pay the city three percent of the proceeds.

Blow said the city would not allow the company to commingle assets with the Norfolk and Portsmouth assets and that with no changes in the quality of service and no changes in the benefits to the subscribers, the legal department found no detriment to the city.

Mayor Robert G. Jones and other members of Council seemed perplexed about how a simple name change would effect tax savings.

Also, the city wanted to be sure its action would not involve the city in an anti-trust suit filed by the city's only other cable franchisee, Resort Satellite Communications, Inc. of Virginia.

K. Thurman, attorney for Resort, and Alice Mullen, one of the company's principals, opposed approval of the resolution.

Thurman said that with the merger of Cox properties, the assets would be combined, which would be a disadvantage to his client. By the action, he said, Cox would end his client's business. He said the change is an attempt to monopolize TV in Virginia and to maintain dominance in the market.

Resort Satellite has a franchise to furnish cable services in the area from 19th Street to Birdneck Road. By pooling its resources, he said, Cox can drive out the Resort business.

Bowers said he did not want the city to get involved in the legal dispute.

Bowers said that similar

Mounting support

Lieutenant Frank Drew of the Virginia Beach Police Department said he's given more than 150 press interviews since 1984 when the Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol began.

When interviewed, Drew usually talks about how city and police officials are glad that it costs the city less than $20,000 a year to operate the patrol, which includes feed and bedding, veterinarian supplies, farrier services and grooming supplies. And all of the mounted patrol's horses were donated by the community.

The mounted patrol's law enforcement effectiveness has been well documented. The psychological barriers the horses break down between police officers and the community are many. But by most accounts, it was Frank Drew, himself a horse owner and lover, who made the unprecedented project a reality. In fact, Drew remembers with a laugh, there were some oceanfront innkeepers who declared that he could never get horses to patrol down Atlantic Avenue. But if you ask Drew what has contributed greatly to the patrol's success, he talks about Jerry Modlin, Cashvan Arabian Farms' trainer.

The quiet but loyal support the Cashvan family has given the department and the mounted patrol is admirable, if not inspiring. Modlin and Drew's greatest lament, however, is that more horse farm owners haven't offered to support the patrol. Perhaps they feel that Cashvan Farms can do it alone. That their extra help is not needed.

But that is not true.

That's why a private foundation has been formally established to channel monies and gifts directly to the Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol.

The City of Virginia Beach, its citizens and visitors should not take for granted the mounted patrol or Cashvan Arabian Farms' benevolence. The patrol is effective, but a broader base of support is needed for it to reach its eventual goal. - G.D.G.

Ferrets may attack

By Keith V. Zirkle, sanitarian,
Division of Environmental Health, Virginia Beach Health Dept.

With ferrets becoming increasingly popular as pets and Christmas fast approaching, many Virginia Beach pet owners are totally unaware of the dangers associated with owning one of these animals.

The Virginia Department of Health considers the ferret to be a wild or exotic animal and not a domesticated pet.

The ferret is a descendant of the European polecat which was originally raised to hunt rodents. Today, the animal still retains much of its hunter instinct and it is capable of vicious and unprovoked attacks. Within the last five years, there have been numerous reports of unprovoked brutal maulings of children. The ferret seems to be especially attracted to babies, often attacking when parents are away or asleep.

Another danger associated with ownership is that the ferret, like its relatives the skunk and weasel, is highly susceptible to rabies.

In the United States, there have been seven cases of pet ferrets developing rabies. One of these was reported in 1982 in Fairfax County. The Mid-Atlantic States which include Virginia are currently experiencing the most intense wildlife rabies outbreak ever reported.

While dogs and cats can be successfully vaccinated against rabies, there is no effective rabies vaccine for ferrets. Currently, there is very little known about how ferrets react to infection with the virus which causes rabies. There is no method of determining how long a ferret that has been infected by rabies virus may shed that virus in its saliva before symptoms of rabies are recognized. Therefore, when a person is bitten by a ferret the only way of assuring the person's safety against the universally fatal disease of rabies is to sacrifice the animal and test the brain for rabies virus. If the ferret is not sacrificed the person bitten must receive costly preventive treatment with immune globulin and rabies and vaccine.

The Virginia Beach Health Department is particularly concerned at this time of year when many people may be considering the choice of a ferret for a child's pet. They would like the public to be aware of the potential dangers which in some cases could be fatal. The American Veterinary Medical Association has also recently recommended against keeping ferrets as pets. Before one considers investing his time, love, and money in a ferret as a pet he should be aware of the possible tragic consequences of having to euthanize his pet to protect the life of a human being.

Become aware of school-based health clinics

Editor: School-based Health Clinics, according to local sources, will be a top legislative priority in The Virginia General Assembly for 1987.

The proponents of these clinics (Planned Parenthood and The Virginia Department of Children, to name a few) are pushing to establish facilities within public high schools - statewide - that could provide family planning, prescriptions for contraceptives and abortion referrals.

The Norfolk School Board on October 28 gave their approval for a clinic of this nature despite public opposition at hearings throughout the State during 1986.

The Wall Street Journal on October 14, 1986 published an informative report, concluded after a national study, entitled "Curbing Births, Not Pregnancies," by Stan F. Weed, Director of the independent Institute For Research & Evaluation in Salt Lake City. Mr. Weed's research indicates that the school-based health clinics were more effective at convincing teens to avoid birth than to avoid pregnancy. The impact on the abortion and total pregnancy rates was exactly the opposite of the stated intentions of the program according to Weed.

I urge parents of adolescents in the Virginia Beach Public Schools to become aware and involved in the School-based Health Clinic issue by writing or calling your state representatives in the General Assembly, members of The Virginia Beach School Board and the superintendent of Schools.

Liquor purveyors must look to education

The following article was contributed by the National Safety Council.

Liquor liability has been an issue to alcohol purveyors since the 19th century when the courts held that intoxicated persons no longer bore sole responsibility for their actions.

"Dram Shop" laws were instituted by municipalities to protect the families of "habitual drunks." The tavernkeeper was made financially liable to the family if a patron continued to serve a patron after being notified of the person's intemperance. In later years, such laws were extended to prevent injuries to strangers and to prevent persons from selling, furnishing or giving an alcoholic beverage to a minor.

Tavern owners and liquor store proprietors are generally responsible businessmen, licensed by a municipality to provide a service for its residents and guests. Preventing alcohol overservice to customers is a responsibility that is monitored by government agencies, grassroots organizations and community groups. Alcohol servers must realize the immense responsibility they have to both the community and to their patrons. Since the nation's recent focus has been on the drinking driver, responsible beverage retailers are concerned with ways to keep customers from going onto a highway while alcohol-impaired.

Presently there are 38 states that have a "dram shop" statute or use common law to guide the courts when adjudicating a case involving server liability. Further, some state courts continue to broaden the definition of a liquor "supplier." A California court held an employer who served liquor at an office Christmas party must pay damages to an employee who was involved in a highway accident on the trip home, while a Texas court ruled a company which sent a worker home because he was too intoxicated to work is liable for damages from the ensuing accident.

A 1984 New Jersey Supreme Court decision further extended the liability to private citizens who "directly serve" liquor to a guest and allow the person to drive away in impaired condition. This provision holds the host or hostess liable for the injury to others if the guest becomes involved in a motor vehicle accident.

Purveyors of alcohol must recognize they can minimize potential liability through an educational program for both the servers and patrons, so both fully understand the effects of alcohol and its responsible service and consumption.

OP-ED

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

Attraction/Retention: Matter of community concern

Attraction
of teachers

Teachers explain their decision to enter teaching by citing the importance of working with students and facilitating student learning. This suggests that the intrinsic rewards associated with helping students are powerful factors in attracting teachers to the profession.

But what about compensation? Saving that the intrinsic rewards in teaching are important does not imply that monetary rewards are unimportant. Rather, it is to say that teachers have expectations regarding their entry salary and lifetime career earnings that are not unreasonable. They expect levels of pay that are commensurate with the levels of education and training that they bring to their jobs. It is only when these reasonable expectations are not met that the monetary factor in attracting teachers becomes critical.

In recent years, it appears that teacher expectations about levels of pay have indeed been violated. There is ample evidence that the salary levels in teaching are lower than those available in occupations requiring comparable levels of education and training. In fact, this holds true for both entry salaries and career earnings. It is not surprising, and research shows, that people who consider teaching, but choose other occupations, cite low salary as a major reason for seeking alternatives. Thus, to the degree that teachers' levels of pay are not keeping up with those of other professions, we need to focus on improved salaries in attracting prospective teachers to the profession.

Retention
of teachers

The research findings on retaining quality teachers in the profession naturally extend from the findings on attracting those same quality people. The degree to which teachers feel successful with students is of primary importance in teacher retention. Teachers who leave education say they felt blocked in their attempts to reach students and help them learn.

A teacher's success with students appears to be highly related to the teacher's sense of empowerment or "efficacy" that is, a belief in his or her own ability to positively affect student performance. Research suggests that teacher efficacy is enhanced by an organizational environment that supports goal setting by teachers, high levels of exchange between teachers and administrators, adequate resources, such as preparation time, and opportunities for professional growth. Thus, working conditions affect teacher retention by enhancing or inhibiting the development of efficacy and, in turn, teacher success with students.

Frustrating working conditions are also likely to raise levels of teacher stress. In a recent study in which 2,000 teachers from 42 elementary schools and 45 secondary schools were questioned, working conditions were found to be critical predictors of stress. Some of the conditions were found to be critical predictors of stress. Some of the conditions in schools which produced stress were large class sizes, minimum administrative support, and poor communications. To the degree that people leave teaching because of stress, it is clear from this study that we need to concern ourselves with teachers' working conditions if we want to retain them in education.

All of this has important implications in the retention of beginning teachers. Because of low seniority, beginning teachers are likely to receive assignments involving the least favorable working conditions. While this varies greatly from school district to school district and from school to school, it is a factor, together with their relative isolation from colleagues, that typifies many schools. These factors, together with the salary issue, appear to be contributing to a high attrition rate among beginning teachers. If some projections turn out to be correct, about half of the current first-year teachers will be teaching seven years from now.

It's beginning to look a lot like DOW 2000

Wall Street

Ahead

By George T. Slagg

Dow "break out" to new high above 1980 may signal 2000 before year's end.

Last week's market break-out could well trigger a wave of euphoria throughout the canyons of Wall Street, the type of emotion into which traders often sell. It is not very often that the stock market makes headlines on page one of The New York Times.

Moreover, the DOW Industrial Average has advanced well over 100 points since "Bosky Tuesday" two weeks ago. The instant gratification crowd is looking for DOW 2000 before Christmas and they might get it. However, some caution may be in order. They could get a penalty flag for over-reaction.

But make no mistake about it, it was an authentic "break-out" last week, after six months of knocking on the door of 1900, and that would certainly justify DOW 2000 and beyond. So, it is now merely a matter of tactics. We would not chase the market until the traders ring the cash register and the market settles down. We would then pursue positioning our equity portfolios. The overwhelming theme of this "Bull Market" is an ocean of liquidity. Virtually billions are being funneled into mutual funds and other forms of stock and bond investments because the alternative, so-called "risky investments," are not satisfactory. Based on our analysis of interest rates, returns on CD's and other money market investments are going to get even worse.

In the week ahead we get numbers on producer prices and retail sales along with a high level OPEC meeting beginning on the 11th. Tax considerations will loom large between now and year end. But this market will continue to navigate on this sea of liquidity trying to get to 1987, and beyond, before we do.

Finally, as we look wistfully over the headlines of the past few weeks, we think of Diogenes looking for an honest man. He was last seen in Alaska, heading north.

George Slagg is a registered Account Executive and Portfolio Manager with Prudential-Bache Securities on Laskin Road.

Stabilizing Crime

continue. The benefits the police department receive is obvious. For Cashvan, the public relations value and personal satisfaction gained through the arrangement is immense.

But if you ask Modlin exactly why Cashvan Arabian Farms is so benevolent, he'll just shrug his shoulders.

"I really don't know why," the former professional rodeo bronc and bull rider softly replies. "We never asked ourselves 'why?' Somebody needed help and we helped them."

Cashvan Arabian Farms is managed by Jay Wilks. Jointly owned by Herbert and Hy Cashvan, until Herbert died in 1981, the farm is now owned by Hy, who lives in New York and co-manages the 35-acre facility. Cashvan Arabian Farms employs 14 people, according to Modlin, and currently has 55 stalls and 80 to 90 horses. The Cashvans for 18 years operated a training farm in Lago Mar. Sixteen years ago they added the Princess Anne Road breeding farm. Three years ago, the two were combined at its present location.

Nothing Special

begins at 7 a.m. During the morning, after the horses are fed, some of the stallions are worked and some of the mares teased. And even if on some days the main arena will be filled by 11 a.m. with police, city officials, spectators and the press, Modlin maintains that special events like the recent mounted patrol graduation ceremonies have no effect on the day's work.

"We don't do anything special," Modlin said. "You don't have to do anything special for friends."

"We didn't do anything special. You don't have to do nothing special for friends."—Jerry Modlin

The Cashvan organization is delighted with its relationship with the city, Modlin says, but wishes more local residents and horse owners would support the patrol, if in no other way, by attending the graduation ceremonies. He says he has seen few, if any, of the city's leading horse owners attend the ceremonies, which before this one were usually held outdoors.

On video tape

When the police department went fishing for a way to sell the mounted patrol to city officials, Drew went to Modlin, with whom he had been friends for years, and asked him to don a policeman's uniform and cap and ride one of the Arabians for a three-minute videotape he was having produced. Modlin agreed, the tape was shot, presented to the Resort Area Advisory Board and City Council. Within days, the mounted patrol project was approved.

"This has been a friendship thing all along," Modlin said. "Nobody from Cashvan has received a thing for this," except a free copy of the videotape.

Financial contributions to local, state or federal governments are tax deductible, Drew said, but under standard procedures, such grants may not be earmarked to special projects, such as the mounted patrol. To alleviate this, the Friends of the Virginia Beach Mounted Patrol has been formed. It is a tax-free foundation through which the community can make donations directly to the patrol.

Law written to protect horses from assaults

mounted officers make more arrests than others, Drew said.

Within a few years, Drew would like to see the patrol's size increase to 12. Ideally, he said he is looking forward to the day when foot patrols are eliminated, with the department relying totally on motor-scooters, motorcycles, horses, boats, helicopters, all terrain vehicles to cover beats.

The patrol has nine horses; two quarterhorses; three thoroughbreds; an Arabian; a Morgan; and two Tennessee Walking horses. Cashvan Arabian Farms donated three horses, but one was sent to Portsmouth, one was night blind and the other is on duty. A couple of the horses are valued at more than $20,000 each, Drew said.

Don't hit a horse

To protect the horses from a sometimes violent public, Drew said laws have been changed to protect police horses, as well as dogs, from assaults. The misdemeanor charge carries a $250 fine. There have been eight to 10 people, according to Drew, who have been convicted of assaulting horses.

The GOLDEN Years

If retiring, don't wait 'til the last minute

People planning to retire next year or in the near future should not wait until the last minute to get answers to the questions they may have about Social Security.

This may lead to a delay in benefits or Medicare coverage, or even the loss of benefits in some cases.

The people at any Social Security office can answer a person's questions about retirement benefits.

In addition, a special leaflet entitled "Thinking about retiring?" is available for the person contemplating retirement. The leaflet gives answers to questions most frequently asked by people planning to retire.

Many people retire at the beginning of the year because it permits them to wrap up their affairs more conveniently. However, you may retire at any time during the year without affecting your right to benefits or the benefit amount.

Social Security generally suggests that people apply two or three months before the month they wish their Social Security checks to begin. This gives the office time to process the claim and take care of any problems that may crop up.

You may apply by mail, by telephone, or in person. Once a person is interviewed by phone, the rest may be handled by mail.

The best times to call the office to assure prompt service is during the latter part of the month, on Thursday or Friday, and in the afternoon.

A person applying for retirement benefits should have his or her Social Security card or a record of the number; an official record of birth or baptism recorded early in life or other evidence of birth; a copy of his or her W-2 form for the last year; or if self-employed, a copy of the self-employment tax return for the last year since recent reports may not yet be in the records.

If spouses and children are also eligible, evidence may also include a marriage license for a spouse and birth certificates of spouse and children.

People who have questions about retirement should be directed to the staff at the local Social Security office. The people there will be glad to help.

The Norfolk office is located at 200 Granby Mall in the Federal Building. The Virginia Beach office is located at 328 Constitution Drive, across from Pembroke Mall. The Portsmouth office is located at 1827 High Street and the Suffolk office is located in Washington Square Mall at 140 West Washington Street.

Urban Development Housing Meeting

Panelists to grapple with elderly housing crisis question

A panel discussion will address a potential housing crisis for senior citizens in Portsmouth on Friday, Dec. 12, at 8 a.m. at the Portsmouth Partnership Briefing Center in Central Fidelity Bank.

"Elderly Housing Options" will be the topic at the Urban Development Program Meeting, sponsored by The Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce-Portsmouth.

Panelists will include Vashlye Ferguson, a state planner and housing specialist for the Virginia Department for the Aging; Robert Nox, director of Program Management; also, at the aging department; and Ginn ny Becker, director of Portsmouth's Retired Senior Volunteer Program and chairwoman of the Mayor's Senior Citizens Commission.

According to a city press release, changes in availability of senior housing may soon produce an unanticipated housing crisis both in Portsmouth and across the state.

"A growing senior citizen population and changes in housing development incentives are creating havoc in the lives of fixed income seniors," the release stated.

The plight of senior citizens and the general senior citizen housing trends will be discussed at the meeting. Members of the Mayor's Senior Citizens Commission will also be attending this meeting and will be available to answer questions.

The briefing center is on the third floor of Central Fidelity Bank, which is located on the corner of High Street and Crawford Parkway.

"A growing senior citizen population and changes in housing development incentives are creating havoc in the lives of fixed income seniors," the release stated.

$1.35 million resthome to fill growing senior citizens market

Northside Associates of Portsmouth will begin construction of the Mayfair House, a $1.35 million, 100-bed resthome for the elderly.

It will be located in the Northside Redevelopment Project on the northeast corner of Enterprise Way and Fort Lane.

The principals of Northside Associates, a Virginia Limited Partnership, are Larry L. Goldman, Dr. Edwin E. Goldman, and Jerry A. Goldman. Completion of the 25,000-square-foot resthome is scheduled for the summer of 1987, a press release from the Portsmouth Redevelopment and Housing Authority (PRHA) said.

The Mayfair House, divided into three wings and situated on 1.3 acres, will provide private resident rooms, a greenhouse, pharmacy and landscaped courtyards along with other amenities for the residents' enjoyment, according to the release.

The Mayfair House, designed by the Yates Group, fulfills a growing need for the senior citizen housing market in the Hampton Roads area, according to PRHA.

Try making pinwheels

Buddig Pinwheels
¾ ounce package cream cheese, softened
1 teaspoon grated onion
1 teaspoon horseradish
Dash Worcestershire sauce
¼ oz. Family Pak Buddig Smoked Sliced Beef or Ham

Blend cream cheese, onion, horseradish and Worcestershire sauce until of spreading consistency.

Carefully separate slices of Buddig Beef or Ham and lay out each slice, slightly overlapping, about five across on a clean dish towel. Do this for about three rows, all slightly overlapping until you have a rectangle of Buddig meat.

Spread with cheese mixture. Roll as for a jelly roll, using the dish towel to help bring up all the meat at the beginning of the roll. Press along with your fingers this inner ring and then proceed to roll until completed. Chill. When cold, use your fingers to form a better circle. Just before serving, slice into inch slices. † changes are occurring throughout the country. The three local companies operate under Cox Cable of Tidewater which in turn operates under the parent company, Cox Enterprises which is based in Atlanta.

Council says no to name change

Councilwoman Reba McClannan remarked, "You all seem to change stories to suit the occasion."

The item appeared on the consent agenda which is intended to consist of routine items approved by one vote. Bowers said that without the opposition of the Beach franchise, he assumed the item would have been approved routinely.

"I don't want you to think we vote for everything on the agenda," McClannan said.

Bowers said that the name change would have to be made before the end of the year to effect any tax savings.

Councilman Albert Balko said that by combining the three operations, he didn't want to be subsidizing something in the other cities. Of the three, he said, Virginia Beach is obviously the growth area.

Bowers agreed that the proposal offered no advantage to the Beach, but nor would it result in a disadvantage. What name was selected was immaterial, he said.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf opposed a name change that would eliminate the name "Virginia Beach." "Some of us natives are very proud of our city of Virginia Beach," she said, and did not want to lose their identity. She said that she was not comfortable with the concept since it implied no benefit to the city. She suggested using the name, New Cox Cable Virginia Beach or Virginia Beach Cox Cable.

Name change resolutions were to be considered by Norfolk and Portsmouth Tuesday.

Councilman John A. Baum moved to approve the change, seconded by Councilman Robert Ferriss.

Oberndorf was ready to offer a substitute motion to defer the matter for a week to allow for time for a new resolution to be drawn using the name "New Cox Cable Virginia Beach."

Baum remarked that the matter should be settled which led Oberndorf to comment that

Baum "was right, the primary motion should be voted up or down and it should be done today."

The resolution was voted down with those voting in favor including Councilmen Baum, Harold Heischouer and John Perry and Mayor Robert G. Jones.

Turf Trade Show scheduled

The 27th annual Virginia Turf Conference and Trade Show is scheduled for Wednesday through Friday, Jan. 12 to 23, at the Pavilion Convention center.

Robert E. Menzer, former chairman of the Environmental Protection Agency's science advisory panel, will be the keynote speaker, talking on "Pesticide Paranoia—How Real Is the Risk?"

Other speakers will include Kathy Copley, editor of Grounds Maintenance magazine; Pat O'Brien, regional agronomist for the U.S. Golf Association; Charles L. Bethke, director of research and development at the Michigan Peat Co., and Clinton Hodges, professor of plant pathology at Iowa State University. Speaker at the annual banquet will be humorist Jeanie Roberts, a former Miss North Carolina.

Additional information concerning the program or registration can be obtained from John R. Hall III, Extension agronomist, department of agronomy, Virginia Tech, Blacksburg, Va. 24061 or by calling (703) 961-5797.

Scriptural artist to show paintings at local gallery

The Kempsville location of Village Gallery in Fairfield Shopping Center will be hosting a return exhibition of paintings by scriptural artist Leana Fay.

Leana has devoted her artistic energy to incorporating God's Word into paintings. Combining her expressive calligraphy and more traditional visual designs, she illustrates the emotions and imagery inherent in scriptural passages.

The Mayor's Report

The Mayor's Report is published monthly exclusively in The Virginia Beach Sun

By Robert G. Jones, Mayor
City of Virginia Beach

The fundamental test in a democracy of political decisions is the expression of the public's opinion in an election. Such tests restructure all the complexities before the public into a final, binary simplicity: for or against.

Since the results so compactly encode the diffuse thoughts of all the individual voters, they require analysis and interpretation to unpack, or decode, the "real" message they send. To move beyond the basic outcome, that the majority signal prevails, and choose a future political course in uncharted waters, it is invaluable to be able to read and understand the public mind and the public will at such bedrock moments in time.

On Nov. 4 the Virginia Beach voters decided four referendum items: bonds for roads, schools and a recreation center, 44% for and direct election of mayor, 89% for.

The bonds approved are the largest amount ever in the history of the city. When considered in light of the fact each entailed an announced increase in the real estate tax rate, the results for roads and schools were undoubtedly "landslides." Even more, the 9 to 1 approval of the direct election of the mayor was so resounding as to speak for itself.

The interesting questions, though, involve what these results mean for the life of the City of Virginia Beach. A Virginia Beach newspaper editor interpreted the results as a compliment to city council, since they showed, in his opinion, that "the council and the public are singing off the same sheet of music."

To see the results in the most meaningful context for local politics, however, they doubtless must be considered in light of the fact, as stated in a previous Report, that the growth issue is the paramount concern of Virginia Beach voters. That is the common background for the interpretations given by local editors. As one wrote:

"Voters were sending a message about the city's rapid growth rate. Tuesday's overwhelming vote in favor of road bonds is an indication that voters have more confidence in the new, slow-growth council. The voters appear to be saying: If you (members of the council) will do your best to limit new growth, we'll provide money to pay for the old growth."

Writing in a similar vein, another editor added:

"Since [the new council] took office in July, they have legislated a halt to development in the south, instituted a first-things-first policy for capital improvements, put the School Board on a short leash, and hatched a 10-year road construction program."

They also crafted a plan for direct election of mayor, an idea that previous councils favored but could never seem to get implemented. It was on the ballot Tuesday, passing by a 9-1 margin. Voters, not the council, will elect the next mayor in 1988.

That's far more than most city councils accomplish in two years. And voters rewarded them Tuesday night."

These informed city observers are on the mark: council unquestionably did get a strong vote of confidence for its work. The voters' decisive endorsement of the council's plan to open the election for the chief political officer of the city to the electorate itself shows a particular consensus between the council and the public. Even the recreation center vote does not dim this consonance when two facts are considered:

* a shift of only 3.2% of the vote from "no" to "yes" would have carried the question.

* the 12 precincts closest to the proposed location of the center all gave majority support to it, despite the likelihood that these precincts include the most tax sensitive ones in the city.

Had the strong opposition of Bayside voters been anticipated, a better "package" could have been readily conceived that would likely have swung the 3.2% of the vote needed to pass it. The vote reflects a rejection of the geography rather than of the concept of replicating the highly successful Kempsville Center in other locations around the city.

A vote of confidence, however, as any parliamentary system shows, is but a passing signal and not a message guaranteeing permanent support. In the dynamic flux of public opinion, confidence is a factor that must continually be earned anew. Thus the basic message the election sent, in actuality, is a surface encouragement which wraps a profound challenge to city council. The tentative partnership between the electorate and the council, properly characterized as a token of hope as much as anything, challenges the council to rightly answer the question, What's next?

Both by law and by common expectancy, council is the leadership forum where the future welfare of the community is most centrally decided. If Virginia Beach is to emerge as a great American city, rather than as an unfortunate and happenstance concentration of population, the council must set out an agenda for the future of the city that both genuinely responds to the needs of the people and inspires their confidence and pride.

Only by thus capturing the imagination of the city at large will the encouraging promise raised by the election become the realized potential of the future Virginia Beach. That challenge is now council's basic work: to close the gap between where Virginia Beach is and where it could be.

This work calls for an agenda to be formulated that, first, initiates dialogue among and between the council and the public and, second, leads to actions to close the gap. The task of the next Report, to be issued at the start of the New Year, will be to offer a plan that should lead, in the end, to action. One thing is for sure, success will come only if council keeps its eye on the ball.

In the meantime, the following summarizes the highlights of council's work in the month of November.

School Board Appointments.

For the first time, the council conducted open interviews with persons who indicated an interest in serving on the school board. Ten candidates for the three positions came forward for 15 minute interviews. After a public hearing on Dec. 8, council will fill the openings on Dec. 15.

Revision of Comprehensive Zoning Ordinances. Councilwomen Barbara Henley, Reba McCann and Nancy Parker have been working with staff and three members of the Planning Commission to update the CZO. Council has over a period of many months made requests to the commission for revisions and the CZO itself has been amended many times. This has created a backlog and a patchwork ordinance that needs thorough review. A draft of the proposed revision is expected in March 1987, and the changes will significantly affect the future development of the city.

Billboards and Signs. One specific request to the Planning Commission which the council asked to be expedited was a recommendation on billboards.

This follows the action of council to lower signs and reduce the size of their surfaces, and reflects a heightened concern of council to enhance the aesthetics of the city. This was highlighted when council refused to grandfather signs on Virginia Beach Boulevard which had to be moved by the improvements currently in progress.

Legislative Package. The council worked to refine the requests to be made of the city's legislative delegation for revisions to the state's statutes in the upcoming session of the General Assembly. The full package is to be adopted in time to meet with the delegation on Dec. 16.

Beach Replenishment. The long standing concern of council over the commitment of funds to begin replenishment of the Sandbridge beach was tentatively resolved by the adoption of five resolutions which encourage seeking all possible funding from federal and state sources and expresses the interest of council that the Sandbridge beach be preserved. The city received a communication from Vivian Watts for the state indicating that sand would not be available from the Thimble Shoals dredging project. The state seems content to allow the city to hope sand might be available from the Baltimore channel dredging, but seems unwilling to take any leadership in behalf of the city to assure that this source would be used to the benefit of the city.

Target Area Tour. The council took a bus tour of the city's target areas to become familiar with where they are and the work that has been done in them in regard to housing and infrastructure.

Here is a summary of some of the recently published news events affecting Virginia Beach.

Crosshaw wins
In the political arena, Glenn R. Crosshaw was elected to replace Owen B. Pickett as Virginia Beach's House of Delegates representative. Only 25 percent of the voters exercised their voting privileges in the election, but those that did gave Crosshaw nearly 700 more votes than his opponent, Melvin M. Spence.

Dam Neck Rezoning
The decision on rezoning a 600-home subdivision at Dam Neck was put off until the new year as questions of the ecological impact arose. Pollution to the Back Bay was discussed and the project was delayed two months as guidelines are worked out.

Suicide
The tragedy behind the suicide of Wanda Jean Honeycutt, 22, who leaped to her death from the 14th floor of an oceanfront condominium, ended with local residents donating gifts to cover the cost of her funeral, flowers and grave.

Her body was not claimed by her family after her death because they were too poor to pay for the services. The sets of charity totaled over $3,700, though a grave marker is still needed.

Library videos
Virginia Beach residents will be able to obtain videocassettes at their local library, starting late next year. All you will need is your library card to borrow tapes from a selection of 1,000 cassettes that will be located at the Virginia Beach Public Library now under construction on Virginia Beach Boulevard.

Swimming efforts
Gary Antonick, 23, fell short in his effort to swim 4,000 lengths of a pool in 24 hours. But his effort at the Virginia Beach YMCA was not a failure in the eyes of the many who encouraged him from Saturday morning until Sunday in his efforts to get into the Guinness Book of World Records.

In another swimming effort of heroic stature, an unnamed Navy man swam two miles from his overturned craft to shore to alert authorities of the mishap. Three others who stayed with the boat were rescued by helicopters off Rudee Inlet an hour after the man reached shore.

Dieth death
Questions surrounding the death of Dominick J. "Andrew" Dieth were brought to the surface again when an autopsy report revealed scars, bruises and blisters on his body.

Andrew was one of 17 children Michael, 41, and Karen, 36, Dieth were responsible for and much of the cause has been focused on the way they disciplined them.

Dogs poisoned
Friends of Jackie Delach of Princess Anne Plaza were shocked when all three of her dogs were apparently poisoned early last week. The dogs were friendly with all the children in the neighborhood and the reason behind the dogs' deaths is still a question mark.

25th homicide
The murder of Carole Morrison, Virginia Beach's 25th homicide, still has police baffled. Too many questions are still unanswered for police to put together the crime.

What happened during the last hours of her life—where she went and how she got from where her car was to where the body was found—is still being investigated.

Editorials

In praise of charity

When Wanda Jean Honeycutt committed suicide a few weeks ago, she was alone. Her body lay unclaimed in the Norfolk Crime Lab for one week while police tried to locate relatives. When found, they refused to claim the body because they were too poor to pay for the services.

But yesterday she was buried by many "friends" she never knew.

In the place of a pauper's funeral, local businessmen and other residents donated what was needed to give her a proper burial.

The news account said of the people who gave, "None of them wanted publicity for their acts of charity, but all said they felt sorry for the young woman and the way her short and tragic life ended."

But the acts of charity in response to this tragedy should be held in high esteem by the community. Though the history of man records man's depravity and his inhumanity to others, there are those events and actions which reflect the love which is possible between man. We praise those that acted charitably toward Wanda Jean Honeycutt.

In these hectic weeks between Thanksgiving and Christmas it is easy to get caught up in the hub-hub of activities. Too many times these very activities gloss over the real meaning behind these two holidays.

When this happens, only we are the losers. Miss Honeycutt should remind us of what is really important in life. It is important to remember the real meaning of Christmas.

During the holiday season, it is tragic that a woman of 22 should choose to end her life by suicide. It is tragic that the poverty of her family did not allow them to help in the very end.

But the acts of charity in response to this tragedy should be held in high esteem by the community. Though the history of man records man's depravity and his inhumanity to others, there are those events and actions which reflect the love which is possible between men. We praise those that acted charitably toward Wanda Jean Honeycutt.—J.D.B.

At what cost growth?

Virginia Beach is growing fast. All of us enjoy the benefits of a growing economy.

But at what price?

A case in point is before the City Council. The proposed 600-home development at Dam Neck has been delayed until the council can better assess its impact on the city's environmentally fragile Back Bay area.

The problem facing them is not a new one. Do you continue growth, build a new neighborhood and add more tax revenue, even with the possibility of incurring some ecological problems; or, do you protect the Back Bay and sacrifice the growth?

Any negative effects that development places on Back Bay are not easily reversed. Their result will be felt for generations, not just terms of office. Short term gains must be weighed against the long term consequences.

Every politician knows that maintaining prosperity for their constituency is one of the best ways to stay elected and retain office. But the principles behind this type of decision should override political ambitions.

Any negative effects that development places on Back Bay are not easily reversed. Their result will be felt for generations, not just terms of office. Short term gains must be weighed against the long term consequences.

When the council members make their decision in a few months, it is hoped that they have their voter's best interest, and their voter's children's best interest in mind.—J.D.B.

Letters to the Editor

P.A. student's letter prompts action, reply by city official

Editor, The Virginia Beach Sun: In a recent letter to the editor in The Virginia Beach Sun, Eileen Quinn, a Princess Anne High School student, expressed concern about the traffic situation at the school as it relates to Virginia Beach Boulevard. I am happy to report the following:

This situation has previously been called to our attention by the school administration and, as a result, our Traffic Engineering Division conducted traffic studies substantiating the justification and need for installing a traffic signal at that location. We subsequently asked the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation to include the installation of a traffic signal as part of the Virginia Beach Boulevard reconstruction project which they currently have under construction. I am pleased to say that the State Highway Department has agreed to that request.

The design for that signal has recently been completed and orders for the required equipment are now being processed. I should point out that, the signal poles required for the installation must be manufactured, and that process may require as much as several months, but as soon as the equipment is received, the state may begin the actual construction.

We appreciate and share her concern for traffic safety, and thank her for caring enough to bring this situation to our attention.

O'Brien calls for tighter academic standards

Editor, The Virginia Beach Sun: Although I have put aside my "no pass, no-play" proposal for the time being, I intend to pursue ways, through legislation if necessary, to guarantee higher academic standards within the high schools of the Commonwealth, particularly among athletes.

The new "Take 3 - Pass 5" standard of the Virginia High School League is a step in the right direction but does not go far enough. (For your readers, the Virginia High School League sets eligibility standards for extracurricular activities like dramatics, cheerleading, and athletics.)

Most youngsters, including athletes, pay attention to their studies because they have diligent parents (or peers).

Others need an "external influence." I know from experience. Without divulging which kind of athlete I was in high school, had I not had a coach and a teacher who took me aside before it was too late and said, "Listen, kid..." there was no way I would ever have gotten into college with or without a football scholarship.

Academic standards need to be tightened even more. A "Take 5 - Pass 5" standard simply keeps a few students eligible (with five "Ds") who otherwise would likely flunk out.

The danger of this standard is that it might encourage otherwise good students to perform at the minimum satisfactory level required to stay eligible.

The high school principals and teachers need more authority.

I would like to see every school appoint a teacher (from the English, math, history or science departments) to monitor the performance of students in extracurricular activities, with the authority to bar any student from practice for flagrant academic non-performance. Truancy, cutting classes, failing to turn in homework or papers, due, or disruptive behavior in the classroom would be examples.

The athletic department would have to abide by decisions of the academic monitor. Only the principal could overrule the monitor's decision, and only for sound reasons that went beyond the value of the student to the extracurricular activity.

I would introduce legislation that would provide funding to pay monitors for these additional responsibilities.

From experience as a player and a coach, I know what will happen about the second time a coach or drama teacher is told that student Jones cannot practice today because he didn't turn in his math homework. The youngster will be called in for one of those "Listen, kid" lectures, and it might very well be the last thing that ever happened to him.

Trible's letter reflects commitment to Bay clean-up

U.S. Senator Paul Trible has urged the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to maintain the federal government's commitment to clean up the Chesapeake Bay.

The following is the text of a letter Trible reportedly sent to EPA Administrator Lee Thomas:

"It is essential that the federal commitment to clean-up the bay be maintained. This is a critical time for the Bay. A continuation of EPA's current appropriation for Bay clean-up activities during the coming fiscal year will ensure that we can continue to reverse the long decline of a unique and vital resource.

Great strides have been made thanks to the commitment of federal, state and local authorities. I am confident that your continued strong support will alleviate the Bay's pollution problems and enhance the clean-up effort in coming years.

Christmas trees offer tradition

Each year thousands of Virginia Beach families bring a natural Christmas tree into their homes. This tradition endures year after year, but how did it get started?

According to historians, trees were decorated in winter celebrations—long before there was a Christmas. In the British Isles, Druid sorcerers hung golden apples and lit candles on oak trees to celebrate the winter solstice. In the middle ages, the feast of Adam and Eve was held on Dec. 24 and a fir tree hung with red apples was its symbol. Almost every Northern European culture gave significance to certain evergreen trees because of their unchanging character the year round. Firs and junipers were always brought inside at the winter solstice.

Historians believe that a non-Christian religious festival held centuries ago in Germany's Harz Mountains was the beginning of our Christmas tree custom. It is generally believed the use of the evergreen as part of the Christmas tree celebration started 400 years ago in Germany and spread throughout Northern Europe by the 19th century.

Hessian mercenaries brought the custom to the United States during the Revolutionary War. A Philadelphia newspaper story in 1825 commented on decorated trees in German immigrant homes during the Christmas season. In 1842, a German named Charles Minnegerode introduced the custom locally in Williamsburg. His tree was described as being decorated with strings of popcorn, nuts and candles.

The first recorded Christmas tree retail lot was set up in New York City in 1851 by one Mark Carr. This Pennsylvania hauled by oak balsam fir trees from the Catskills. Balsam fir remained the best selling and most popular tree until 1965 when the more lush western Douglas fir and east coast grown Scotch pine supplanted it in popularity.

Today the Christmas tree shopper has a variety of species from which to choose. Besides balsam fir, Douglas fir and Scotch pine, the buyer can select from Norway spruce, blue spruce, Fraser fir, red pine, Austrian pine, white pine, Virginia pine and red cedar. Fraser fir is generally the most expensive while white pine and Scotch pine make excellent Christmas trees at a more modest cost. Though overlooked locally, red cedar makes an excellent Christmas tree and decorates many homes in the deep South.

White pine and Scotch pine are the basis of a developing Christmas tree industry in Eastern Virginia. Growers are working with Virginia pine and Norway spruce as well. In a few years, locally grown trees will be available to keep the Christmas tree tradition going in Virginia Beach.

Legislators face choices: political expedience vs. longterm planning

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

The tax reform battle has moved down 1-95 from Washington and will soon be waged in the Virginia Legislature. As Virginia stands to gain from 5 percent of total state revenue, we will decide how the surplus should be used.

The question being considered by legislators is, "Should I vote to rebate the surplus revenues with a general election on the immediate horizon, or should I vote to use this surplus to address urgent problems in education, corrections, and other areas?"

The elimination of many former federal deductions will automatically trigger higher revenues for Virginia, as Virginia uses the federal definition of taxable income. If no changes are made, Virginia's taxpayers will be taxed at the current state rate, but on a greater portion of their income.

Virginia's revenues should rise by $183.8 million in fiscal year 1988, $232.9 million in 1989, and $263 million in 1990.

Gramm-Rudman cuts... should certainly be a factor.

Are there reasons other than the well documented needs of education, corrections, and other state agencies for at least postponing action to allow the politically expedient rebate checks on election eve?

The projected negative effects of Gramm-Rudman's cuts in federal funding to the states should certainly be a factor, as should the slow but sure downturn of the economic indicators, which may foreshadow a decline in tax revenues.

In addition, any increase in the sales tax, which is essential to addressing the needs of education, may face greater opposition as these taxes are no longer federally deductible. There are sound fiscal reasons for opposing the popular rebate solution to the windfall.

"Excellence in Education: A Plan for Virginia's Future: The Report of the Governor's Commission on Excellence in Education," which was released in October of this year, contains a plan to make Virginia's schools among the top ten in the nation. The report has received a cool reception because it would be expensive to implement.

This report concluded that: "Far more money will be needed to attain the educational system the future will demand. Extra spending alone will not guarantee quality. But we cannot make headway without it."

For Virginia, the impact of the new federal tax law is an opportunity to increase support of the schools that will serve the citizens of Virginia's 21st century.

I urge our legislative representatives to reject political expedience in favor of the ultimate good of our commonwealth.

Wall Street The Week Ahead

By George T. Staggs

Wall Street went through a listless week last week as traders rested and some profit taking set in after the DOW reached its all time high of 1955 on Dec. 2. With 12 trading days remaining in 1986, we still have hopes of a happy ending with a DOW 2000 by New Year's Eve. Break out the bells, whistles and funny hats.

Goblins will dominate the scene in the week ahead as the December options and futures closeout bring on the "triple witching hour" this Friday. The marketplace anticipates great volatility in this year-end options session that takes place in a market plagued by uncertainty and concern over what may take place next in the Iran arms sale and Boesky insider trading scandals.

Dow find support at 1900 level and investors wonder if 2000 target can be reached

The Wall Street Journal quotes an executive of Shearson Lehman Brothers, Jack Baker, as saying he wouldn't be surprised to see a record trading volume and a ".75 point move" either way during a single session by this Friday's options expiration. How's that for volatility and uncertainty?

This week we will probably see the results of the OPEC oil cartel meeting that began in Geneva last Thursday. It appears that the cartel is determined to get their act together on production sharing and thereby firm the price of oil at the 18 dollar per barrel level.

Wall Street will be very interested in any communique out of Geneva.

In addition, this week we add to the hopper figures on housing starts, personal income and revisions of third quarter gross national product. Stir slowly over moderate heat.

Technically, after building a base above the 1900 level, the market appears to be in shape for a final happy fade into the sunset.

Quiet on the set, please...Roll em.

Stay warm and safe with portable heaters

A majority of Virginia Beach homes use a heat pump for the primary source of heat, and many consumers use portable space heaters to assist these units. Space heaters must be used safely, and correctly in order to be beneficial. When you purchase a new space heater, read the enclosed manufacture's brochure cover to cover.

A portable space heater is not to be used as a primary source of heating the home. This puts an abnormal strain on the unit and could overheat. The unit should be equipped with an emergency cutoff switch if the heater is knocked over. Periodically check the cord for cracks or fraying. To do this, simply unplug the cord and run your fingers over the entire length and bend the cord slightly until reaching the end. If the cord is cracked or has been smashed by a heavy piece of furniture, replace the cord at once.

Do not place the heaters near furniture, drapes or anything combustible. Do not put the space heaters in a passageway or where loose clothing could be ignited if brushed up against it. If you smell smoke, quickly check these areas and call the fire department if you cannot locate the problem. Do not hesitate dialing 911! Where there's smoke, there's fire. Who said that?

Come by a fire station in Virginia Beach and ask for a pamphlet on winter fire safety. Think fire safety—your life may depend on it.

Bus tours for seniors/handicapped individuals are announced for the Back Bay Wildlife Refuge

Senior citizens and handicapped individuals will have an opportunity to view migratory waterfowl and other wildlife during organized bus tours on Sunday, Jan. 4 and Sunday, Feb. 8.

The two-hour bus tour will begin at 1 p.m. on both days and will carry participants along the Refuge dike roads past waterfowl impoundments, through marsh areas, upland areas, and along dune lines to view ducks, geese, swans, and other wildlife.

Any senior citizen who is at least 60 years of age and any individual who is unable to walk long distances due to physical disability may sign up for the trip. Callers may make reservations for themselves and one other person. Reservations are required since the bus has seating capacity for only 36 individuals.

Although individuals with physical disabilities are encouraged to participate on the tour, the bus is not designed for wheelchair use and riders must climb several steps to board the bus. Warm clothing is recommended since there will be opportunities to stop and get off the bus to observe wildlife. Binoculars and spotting scopes are also recommended for better viewing ability.

Reservations are required and will be accepted beginning Monday, Dec. 22, at 10 a.m. Phone 804-721-2412 to make reservations for either day. Leaflets and additional information can be obtained by writing Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge, P.O. Box 6286, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23456.

recognized the national importance of this estuary in his 1984 State of the Union message. The Congress has also recognized the importance of the Bay program by funding the clean-up effort every year.

Last year, EPA, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia worked together to develop the Chesapeake Restoration Plan, which clearly defined the general objectives of a cooperative federal-state program to clean-up the Bay. The Restoration Plan has laid a solid foundation.

However, it is only a foundation. The next step is to define specific water quality standards, Bay-wide strategies and goals for all the tributaries of the Bay.

Wildlife Film

Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge will host an afternoon of wildlife films in the Visitor Contact Station Auditorium on Sunday, Dec. 28, from 1-3:30 p.m.

Films to be shown will specifically highlight waterfowl and other wildlife of special concern. The classic "So Little Time" will be presented as well as "Wildlife, Wetlands and You - The Duck Stamp Story," "Black Duck Identification," "Flight of the Snows," and more.

Board and Community Services Board. Following the bus tour, the council held separate meetings with the School Board and the Community Services Board. Each group provided council with the opportunity to become more familiar with their concerns and needs.

In addition, the council was treated to a breakfast by Congressman-elect Owen

Pickett. This was the first such opportunity for council in many years. The staff had prepared a list of concerns in the city's relations with the federal government, particularly in regard to the Army Corps of Engineers. Four members of council attended the National League of Cities convention in San Antonio, Texas: Mrs. Meyera Oberdorf, Mrs. Reba McClanahan, Mr. Albert Balko, and myself.

The failure rate is staggering. Nearly 80% of all new businesses flounder in the first three years. The outlook in food services is even more bleak. Only 10% of all new restaurants survive into their fourth year. If you plan to start a new business, the odds are decidedly against you.

According to Agatha Peterson, Continuing Education Program Developer at Tidewater Community College, the high rate of failure is due in part to the general lack of understanding of what is involved in starting a small business. Peterson notes that many people assume a thorough knowledge of a product or service will ensure a successful business endeavor.

In fact, the opposite is often true. Most people who start small businesses know a great deal about their product, but very little about effective business practices.

In response to this need for practical information on small business practices, Tidewater Community College and the Virginia Beach Small Business Committee of the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce will co-sponsor "How to Start A Small Business," a four-week series geared to individuals interested in starting a business or those who are already in business.

The seminar will be conducted in four separate workshops. In order to facilitate individual schedules, two sessions on each topic will be offered: one on Friday evenings (7 through 9:30 p.m.) and the other on Saturday mornings (9 through 11:30 a.m.). Although the entire series will be especially beneficial for those seriously considering starting a business, participants may also register for individual sessions.

Session One, entitled "Is a Small Business Right for You?" (Jan. 9 or Feb. 14), will focus on the characteristics of successful entrepreneurs, the rewards and costs of owning a small business, and the need for setting realistic goals.

Session Two, "Small Business Planning," (Jan. 17 or Feb. 21), examines the need for planning, estimating costs, forecasting sales, and break-even analysis. Participants will have the opportunity to set up and analyze a long-range business plan.

"How to Find Available Financing" is the topic for Session Three, (Jan. 23 or Feb. 28). Various financing options will be considered. Participants will also determine how much capital is

Council focuses on Beach traffic problems

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The most recent resort area plan calls for less street, more sidewalks, elimination of parking on stub and side streets leading into Atlantic Avenue and two-way traffic on Atlantic Avenue and all but two of the side streets.

The report—the Virginia Beach Resort Area, Circulation System: A Proposed Concept—was prepared by a joint committee of the Resort Area Advisory Commission and the Virginia Beach Hotel and Motel Association.

Henry Ruiz, the city's resort programs director, said the decline in the resort area can be traced to one major cause, the automobile. Providing amenities and conveniences for the driver has pushed the pedestrian aside, he told Council Monday afternoon at a work session.

The thrust of the recommendations in the report, which took six months to prepare, is to make room for pedestrians.

The joint project came into being after the city experimented with one-way traffic on Atlantic Avenue, recommended by the Resort Area Advisory Commission. The merchants opposed the change.

The intent of the new plan is to get some of the traffic off of Atlantic and onto Pacific and other arteries. The sidewalks on Atlantic would be enlarged at the expense of the street and made attractive with landscaping.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan remarked that the city has been waiting a long time for an acceptable plan, but that Council should appoint a design review committee. She said that many establishments have been built recently that don't look any better than what was there. "If we're going to spend money," she said, "we should have some control."

When Council adopts the plan, she said, it should also adopt the formation of a review committee.

The appearance of what's done in the private sector, she said, is just as important as what the city does.

McClanahan also expressed skepticism about a proposal to locate elevated platforms (four to ten feet high) on Atlantic Avenue at 4th Street, 6th Street, Norfolk Avenue, 17th Street, 19th Street, 21st Street, 22nd Street and 31st Street and a key location north to 31st Street.

The idea is to provide a police presence on Atlantic Avenue, but McClanahan remarked, that "you would feel as though you're being watched every move you make."

To try out the plan, the committee has proposed a "super blocks" demonstration project. The locations suggested are the 20th to 23rd Street area of Atlantic Avenue and along 21st and 22nd Streets to Pacific Avenue. The report notes that 75 percent of the visitors to the Beach are exposed to this area.

Virginia Beach Councilman Robert Fentress said he likes the super blocks idea and that he did not think things could wait any longer.

The improvements on the super blocks would consist of narrowing Atlantic Avenue, widening and upgrading all sidewalks on its east and west sides, street planting, furnishings and graphics and systems to reduce the adverse visual impact of overhead wiring.

The traffic pattern on the numbered streets would become two-way except for 21st and 22nd Streets, and parking would be removed to provide space for sidewalks and other improvements.

Also, Atlantic Avenue would be restriped from 25th Street to 23rd Street to four lanes and 23rd and 24th Streets would be converted from one-way to two-way streets.

Features of the plan are:

•The narrowing of Atlantic Avenue to a four-lane, two-way traffic pattern south of 25th Street with left turn lanes at major intersections if feasible. A typical section would have a 20-foot western sidewalk, a 12-foot eastern sidewalk and 48-foot traffic area.

•The same treatment would apply north of 25th Street to 40th Street, but the design would accommodate a narrower right-of-way.

•Atlantic Avenue would be closed in front of the Cavalier Hotel and a 90-degree intersection developed to move traffic onto Pacific Avenue to discourage the use of Atlantic Avenue as a major traffic arterial.

•Provision of left turn lanes at major intersections and removal of parallel parking on Pacific Avenue. The long range approach is to expand Pacific Avenue to a four-lane landscaped, divided highway for its full length through the resort area.

•Revising the traffic pattern for all numbered streets between Atlantic and Pacific Avenues, except for 21st and 22nd Streets, from one-way to two-way traffic pattern. Parking would eventually be removed from all side streets. The removal of the parking spaces would be coordinated with the development of municipal parking facilities.

•Transforming all stub streets between the Loop and the Cavalier into pedestrian plazas.

•Upgrading Norfolk Avenue.

•Installation of an integrated circulation and orientation signage system directing visitors to major destinations such as "north beach," "mid beach," "south beach," and "Croatan," major activities and public parking.

Long range improvements include upgrading the full length of Atlantic Avenue and all side streets to Pacific Avenue, implementing one-way traffic systems on Arctic Avenue and Baltic Avenue between 17th Street and Laskin Road with necessary gutter, curbing and landscaping, developing 30th and 31st Streets as a one-way pair extending Laskin Road to the resort center, widening and upgrading Birdneck Road to General Booth Boulevard, upgrading the Birdneck Road/Route 44 interchange and development of a visitor orientation/reception center in the vicinity of the Pavilion along the Toll Road.

The committee has asked that the city staff proceed with the overall conceptual planning of the super blocks so that bid documents would be ready by July 1, 1987.

The program is expected to take up to ten years to complete.

The capital budget includes an allocation of $69,650,000 over ten years for resort improvements.

The source of most of the money has not been designated. However, city manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that Council had indicated a referendum would be called to fund the projects. He said he would return with specific recommendations on the proposals.

Council members debate road and school bond; taxes increased

City Council Monday afternoon increased the real estate tax by 8.7 cents bringing the tax rate to 88.7 cents per $100 valuation.

The increase, effective July 1, 1987, was the amount voters were told would be needed to finance $40 million in road bonds, $32.3 million in school bonds and ultimately an additional $30 million in pay-as-you-go road construction.

Voters approved the $72.3 million for roads and school bonds in November referendum.

While Council unanimously approved the five percent tax increase for the road construction, the 3.7 cent increase for schools was passed by a 7-4 vote.

The vote followed the 5-6 defeat of a proposal by Councilman Harold Heischboer to delay part of the increase for schools. Heischboer reasoned that all of the money would not be needed when the bonds would be available to the city.

He proposed instead to raise the tax by five cents for roads and two cents for schools for a total increase of 87 cents but committing the city to an additional increase of $.017 per $100 valuation effective July 1, 1988.

Noting that the Heischboer plan were Councilmen Heischboer, Robert Fentress, John A. Baum, Albert Balko, and Councilwoman Reba McClanahan.

Fentress then voted with the majority to establish the 3.7-cent increase.

Heischboer pointed out that a five percent increase in the real estate assessments combined with the tax rate increase for roads, would actually increase the real estate tax by 14.4 percent. This would mean an average increase in taxes of $240 to $250 a year. He said that although the people understood an 8.7 cent increase would be needed to finance the bonds, if Council decided less was needed, they would be happy.

Assuming the schools are on line in 1988 as expected, he said, payments on the bonds do not occur until one year later and may not occur even in 1988-89. His suggestion, he said, was for a one-year increase instead of two. "I'd rather see the million dollars in the hands of the citizens than in the city which may not need it for debt service."

McClanahan agreed, saying that historically and traditionally, the State has dictated proceeds for tax levies. Surpluses are not traditional with this state, she said. "We're all taxpayers," she said, and between being a Council member and a taxpayer, she said, her biggest concern is as a taxpayer.

McClanahan added that the consideration of the levy now was "almost a waste of time," because it should have been included in the spring when the operating budget is being considered.

Heischboer said that if the city could sell all the bonds immediately and keep the interest, that would be nice, but the law allows the city to earn only six months interest. The timing of the sale is predicted on the school openings, and the tax dollars will not be needed until January 1989.

McClanahan also pointed out that a school normally can't be built in less than two years, from the planning to the completion.

Mayor Robert G. Jones said he agreed with both sides, but that it would be better to stick with the announced amount rather than make another adjustment later.

He said the unknowns in the formula, which can vary the tax needed by two percent, included an expanded tax base, interest rates on the bonds and the cost of the facilities.

He said that the increase will mean a $110 increase on a $300,000 home and a $13.40 increase on an $80,000 home.

Councilwoman Meyra Oberndorf pointed out that the 8.7 cents was not devised by the Council but by the capable and professional staff. She said that 59 percent of the voters favored the school referendum and that the people actually said that the eight-year school plan settled upon by the city was stretching too far.

She said it is never easy to vote for a tax increase and that if the economy is strong and the money is not needed, an adjustment can be made later.

Rae LeSesne, of Kempville, supported the 8.7 cent increase. He said he did not question Heischboer's sincere desire to save the taxpayers money by delaying the tax, but questioned the timing.

LeSesne said the past two years of rezoning (for higher density uses) was the time to address tax increases. The citizens voted overwhelmingly to endorse the concept of roads and school construction, he said. If any question was raised, that should have been done during the workshops, he said.

The tax increase will make sure the people will get the roads and schools they voted for, LeSesne said. Any excess money, he said, can be plowed back into more roads and schools.

Lou Pace, an unsuccessful candidate in the May Councilman election, opposed all of the tax increase, suggesting instead that the city find the money in its present budget.

He had originally proposed an across the board five percent reduction in the budget to furnish money for roads and schools. He returned Monday afternoon with additional proposals in answer to a question by Councilwoman Nancy Parker about where the money was to be found.

Winter water damage

Public Utilities give water tips

By R. Talmage Piland, III, Virginia Beach Department of Public Utilities

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to have your lovely Virginia Beach home flooded, or to see water flowing from a light fixture? Last winter many residences were damaged by water from burst or ruptured pipes.

The Virginia Beach Department of Public Utilities offers you the following maintenance tips designed to help you winterize your home.

Insulate Pipes - Water pipes, particularly those installed next to an outside wall, are often subjected to subfreezing temperatures. An example of this may be a washing machine located in the garage. Any exposed pipes should be wrapped or insulated. There are various types of heating and insulating devices you can purchase to help prevent pipe freeze ups. Items around the house such as old rags, socks, or newspapers may also be used to insulate the pipes.

Don't forget the outside faucets! Be sure to wrap the faucets and place a container or plastic bag over them to prevent the wrapping from being exposed to dampness.

Cabinet Areas - Frozen pipes may be found in areas such as the kitchen or bathroom sinks where the pipes are located under a cabinet. Even if you have wrapped the lines, in subfreezing temperatures, you may wish to leave the cabinet door open to allow room heat to reach the pipes.

Dripping the Faucets - During periods of extremely cold weather, it may be helpful to let your faucets drip slowly. Granted, being conservation minded, you may have second thoughts on running the water, but this is much cheaper than experiencing a flood-drenched home.

Covering Air Vents - If your home is built on a crawl space, be sure to close or cover the air vents located in the foundation wall. This will help prevent the pipes in the crawl space from being exposed to freezing air.

Thawing Pipes - Even the most cautious homeowner may sooner or later experience a frozen pipe. If this happens to you, don't panic. A freeze up at an exposed pipe or under a sink generally can be eliminated by applying heat with a hair dryer, heat lamp, or even a light bulb. Some homeowners have been known to use a flame or gas torch when thawing pipes. Although this may seem to be a reasonable approach, it is also one of the most dangerous. Attempting to thaw a line too rapidly with extreme heat could result in an explosion and injure you.

Private Cut-off Valve - Does your house have a private water cut-off valve in or near the house? If so, know where it is located and how to shut it off in case of an emergency.

Locate Your Water Meter - Have you taken the time to locate and observe your water meter? Most residential water meters are located in front of the house near the curb.

Let's assume that one of your water pipes breaks between the water meter and your private cut-off valve, or that a leak occurs and you do not have a private cut-off valve. In either case, you need to turn off the water supply at the water meter. This can be done by telephoning the Public Utilities Department at 427-4631 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, or 427-4761 after working hours and on weekends and holidays. A representative will be dispatched to turn the meter off for you.

On occasion, during severe inclement weather, the Water Department has been unable to immediately respond to emergency turn-off requests. When this occurs, the homeowner is advised on how to turn off the meter. Should the occasion arise where you have to turn off the meter, a pair of pliers or an adjustable wrench is generally all that is necessary. Turning the curbstop located on the street side of your meter will shut off your water.

Note: Whenever customers turn off the meter for emergency repairs, it is requested that they telephone the Public Utilities Department upon doing so.

Tidewater Bowler's Tribute

Tidewater Bowling Tribute is sponsored by Mitchum Recreation Services, Dwight Mitchum, president.

Bowling parties strike off new year

Few activities lend themselves to all around "FAMILY FUN" like the sport of bowling, which has the ability to provide entertainment to all ages. Area bowling centers are now gearing up to handle the many churches, youth groups, civic leagues, organizations and families that will ring in the New Year in "STRIKING" fashion at their local Bowling Centers.

To make reservations for your group or family, contact any of the above Bowling Centers for further information - HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Big 300: Fairchild rolls perfect game

Bowling in the Princess Match Point Classic league at Princess Lanes on Monday, Nov. 10, Chuck Fairchild rolled the BIG GAME OF 300 - the PERFECT SCORE!

Many times this 300 eluded him in the 16 years since he first took up the sport of bowling. Chuck started bowling when he took a course in college in 1970 and fell in love with the game. When asked how it felt to roll the BIG ONE, Chuck exclaimed "FANTASTIC". The night he bowed his high game he was carrying a 208 average and rolled games of 224-247-300 for a great 772 series.

When asked if he would be satisfied with anything less than a 300 now, he answered, of course I would like to roll more 300's, but my goal now is the elusive 800 series. Chuck also represents Mitchum Recreation Services as the Princess Lanes Center Manager and Director.

Our congratulations go out to Chuck for his 300 game, and to

Chuck Fairchild

Chuck and his wife Nancy, also an avid bowler, for their new family addition - "Cecelia Ruth."

Walters goes to finals

Bowling in the Virginia Men's U.S. Open Tournament, conducted and sponsored by the Virginia Bowling Proprietors Association at Princess Lanes on Nov. 15, Walters won first place with games of 278-214-268-269. He was awarded $1,500 first place money, plus earned a paid entry into the U.S. Open to be held in Tacoma, Washington on Jan. 4 through 10, where he will compete for $500,000 in cash prizes.

The tournament format for the state finals had the entire field of 78 entries bowling two, four-game blocks on Sunday, Nov. 16. The top four scores advanced to head to head matches. Jimmy bowled 190 pins over his average to qualify for the final competition and now will represent Virginia in the 1987 BPAA Men's U.S. Open Tournament.

Eunice Edick

passed away on November 18, 1986. She is survived by Claude Edick, her husband of 28 years, and two sons, Cecil and Evan Shirley. Over the many years of bowling in the Tidewater area, few people have given as much of themselves for the welfare of others. Eunice, we shall miss you and will always remember!

Tidewater bowlers will always remember Eunice

The sport of bowling in Tidewater will always miss Mrs. Eunice Edick. Eunice bowled for 15 years, and served the bowlers of Tidewater as a league secretary over the majority of this time.

During her 15 years of bowling she bowled in a minimum of eight leagues each season, and during the 1985-86 season she bowled in 13 leagues. She bowled in 10 leagues this season at Indian River Lanes. Her contribution to her bowling leagues was one of genuine sincerity and concern.

Eunice unselfishly gave of her time seven days a week to provide the best in league organization and friendship to her league members. Eunice Requests for contributions?

After verifying charity, ask the solicitor where money goes

Readers of The Virginia Beach Sun often find themselves on the receiving end of charitable solicitations. Here are some tips on making contributions, offered by the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, Office of Consumer Affairs:

I get so many requests for contributions. How can I find out whether a charity is legitimate?

This is one of our most frequently asked questions—and for very good reasons. It is estimated that in Virginia alone, $1.5 million are collected for charity. This does not include religious organizations. This kind of generosity brings out many dishonest solicitors so it is imperative that while we give generously, we also give wisely.

The Virginia Solicitation of Contributions Law requires all charities to file with the State Office of Consumer Affairs prior to soliciting. If the charity is not in compliance with the law, we recommend that you not contribute. Information on legitimate charities is available, by calling the Office of Consumer Affairs toll-free number, 1-800-552-9963 or, in Richmond, 786-1343, to assist consumers with this decision-making.

In addition, consumers should ask the solicitor for specific information—and pay close attention to the answers. One of the most important questions to ask before making a donation is "Where does the money go?" Find out how much is spent on fund-raising and administration—and how much goes to the actual program you want to support.

Request written information when solicited by phone. Refuse to commit yourself over the phone. The majority of these solicitations are done by professionals. In many cases, the charity receives only 10 to 20% of the money contributed; the remaining amount goes to the professional solicitor. Ask the caller to tell you what the charity is and what percentage of your total donation is going to the charity—and then decide as to whether or not you want to contribute.

Many times, an illegitimate charity will have an impressive name or one that closely resembles the name of a well-established organization. Listen closely and double check to be sure that the charity and its cause is the one you want to help.

Don't be fooled by a "sob" story, pressured into an immediate donation, or charmed by an attractive solicitor. Remember that not all solicitors represent charitable organizations—so give wisely.

Call the State Office of Consumer Affairs if you have any suspicions about the legitimacy of a charity. When you call, ask for a copy of "The Ten Rules of Giving."

Turf Trade Show scheduled

the U.S. Golf Association; Charles L. Bethe, director of research and development at the Michigan Peat Co., and Clinton Hodges, professor of plant pathology at Iowa State University. Speaker at one annual banquet will be humorist Jeanie Roberts, a former Miss North Carolina.

Man sought for Cape Henry robbery

On Nov. 10, shortly before midnight, the Domino's Pizza Restaurant at 3053 Shore Drive, in the Cape Henry Shopping Center, was robbed.

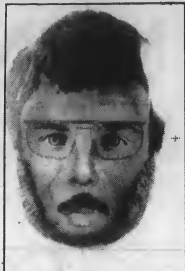

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers will pay a cash reward of up to $1,000 for information that leads to the arrest of the man responsible for this crime.

On that Monday night a man came into the restaurant and placed a take-out order. While employees were preparing his order, he pulled a long barrel pistol from his waist band and demanded money. He also gave the employee a white laundry bag to put the money in. After getting the money, he ran out the front door and was last seen leaving in a late model, mid-size, red car.

The robber is described as Mexican or Spanish, in his 30's, approximately 5'6" tall, heavy build, with straight dark brown hair, a mustache, and a slight beard. At the time of the robbery he was wearing black frame aviator style glasses, a brown sweat shirt, blue pants, and blue tennis shoes.

Anyone with information about this armed robbery or any other crime committed in Virginia Beach can be eligible for a cash reward by calling Virginia Beach Crime Solvers at 427-0000. When calling, you do not have to give your name.

Public servants work holidays

"Christmas is the worst"

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

While most of us enjoy the traditional Christmas festivities, there are men and women who are on duty. The city's police officers, firefighters and emergency rescue squads are just a few of the people who are working when others are relaxing.

With firefighters, being on call for 24 hours and then off 48 hours means that this year 'B' shift pulls duty on Christmas Eve Day and aren't able to go home until 8 a.m. Christmas day.

The police force works on different shift patterns. But Lt. Randy White, shift commander at the 1st precinct, thinks that the varying eight-hour shifts can be harder to deal with.

"You have to reschedule everything depending on what shift you have," he said. "It is frustrating to work if you have plans like family dinner, opening the gifts and visiting relatives."

White, 43, from Cape Story, said it was especially hard when his kids were growing up. "Every holiday is hard, but Christmas is the worst," said White. "When you have younger kids, the family has to work around your schedule."

White, who has been on the Virginia Beach police force for 21 years, pointed out that those on the day shift probably have it the worst.

"You have to be in at work by 8 a.m. so you have to get the kids up real early to open the gifts," he said. "Then you say goodbye and don't see them until that evening."

White said he would rather be coming off a night shift and wait for the kids to wake up, rest during the day, and spend the evening with everyone at dinner.

"It's not impossible to enjoy Christmas," he said, "but it is hard."

Master Police Officer Steve Clayton, who has been on the force for 14 years and is now at the 3rd precinct, said that working Christmas day is hard psychologically.

While being a policeman exposes you to the seadier side of life on a day to day basis, Christmas can be more difficult.

"Domestic calls increase," he said. "People are together more and though they may hope that Christmas will make it different, if they have problems, it can break out."

Clayton, 41, from King's Grant, attributes this to the holidays being an emotional time.

"You learn to deal with it," said Clayton. "In order to sur-

Toll road's four new lanes delayed until April 1987

By Dennis Gribok,
Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation

Completion of new toll lanes at the Route 44 Toll Plaza will be deferred from January to April to permit safety modifications at the plaza on a schedule that will be less restrictive to traffic and less expensive.

Four new lanes are being constructed at the plaza on the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway and the islands for the 10 existing lanes are being modified for safety purposes, said C. A. Nash, Jr., District Engineer of the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation.

The Department has elected to extend the modification phase over a longer period to avoid an additional $80,000 in construction costs for an expedited schedule and to not have interference with traffic through at least ten toll lanes, Nash said.

High Occupancy Vehicle lanes, now in operation from 1-64 to the Toll Plaza, were scheduled to be extended through the plaza and to Laskin Road by January.

Actually, construction has been completed on two additional plaza lanes, Nash said, but one of the existing lanes will have to be closed to permit extension of a tunnel under the plaza as part of the enlargement program for the facility.

"When the aspect is completed, the existing lane islands will be modified and we don't want to reduce the number of available lanes for traffic to do it," Nash said. "On the other hand, we didn't feel we could justify the expenditure of an additional $80,000 to expedite sponsored "Christmas Rooms and Winter Gardens" at the Norfolk Botanical Gardens.

Beach Garden Club wins awards at Botanical Gardens

The Local Award in Design went to the Lynnhaven Colony Garden Club for its Christmas tree decorated in the Victorian manner. It also received the Tri-Color award in design for its small table arrangement. The club had to decorate a room with a Christmas tree, three tables and a mantel with separate awards for each.

Princess Anne Plaza Garden Club received a "Local Award" for its topiary in the Victorian Garden class.

In the Colossal Christmas Balls class, the Princess Anne Plaza Garden Club received the Federation Award for the

"Miscellaneous Class." This was an 18-inch illuminated papier-mache Christmas ball that was hung in the rotunda at the Gardens.

Mrs. Malcolm H. Todd, Jr. served as chairman of the show. She received a Federation Award for her Christmas ball in the class, "Bird Fantasy." She also received an Award of Distinction for Dried Wall Plaques for her "Ringing in the New Year" arrangement. Todd is a resident of Chesapeake Colony.

A Christmas story

Giving the gift of life at Christmas on a wartime Pacific atoll

By B.J. Sessions

For the many years that I have served on the staff of this newspaper, I have from time to time attempted to share with its readers some of the true incidents that have occurred in my life which I felt might be of some interest and with the hope that some might identify with the nostalgia that I feel, especially at Christmas time.

Last year I wrote about my impoverished childhood and of the lonely Christmases of the past in a small rural town in south Georgia at the close of the great depression.

As Christmas approaches this year, I am reminded of an incident that occurred during the second World War in 1944 on the battle-scarred island of Peleliu in the southwest Pacific Islands.

At the time I was attached to the first marine airwing, Marine Air Group 11, which incidentally was the same air group that Gregory (Pappy) Boyington made famous with the exploits of his Black Sheep Squadron, now being aired on television.

It goes without saying that a desolate coral island thousands of miles from home, and with the enemy lurking all around, is not an ideal condition for a Christmas celebration; but somehow Americans have a unique way of making the most of any given situation and this was no exception.

We tried our best to think about our families back home gathered around the Christmas tree singing carols, exchanging gifts and then sitting down to a fine dinner of turkey, dressing, cranberry sauce and all the trimmings.

I especially thought about snow; since the temperature on Peleliu sometimes reached 105 degrees.

The make-shift radio station on the island played Christmas music throughout the day and "I'll Be Home for Christmas" was our favorite.

When this song was played, it would send many tough battle-hardened marines to the latrine, which was the only place on the island where one could find solitude and perhaps cry a little.

There is a myth that Marines don't cry, but don't you believe it. I can assure you that they do.

Since there were no pine or cedar trees on that God-forsaken island, we used any shrubs we could find that had escaped the heavy shelling and air bombardment and decorated them with anything we could find.

I remember in one tent the make-believe tree was decorated with gold tinsel that had been removed from the mouth of dead Japanese bodies that littered the island.

Of course, that particular tent was the exception and we considered its occupants a little weird.

The tree in our tent was decorated with pictures and mementos of our loved ones back home.

That day I spent most of the time in the sack since I was scheduled for guard duty Christmas Eve. My tour of duty was to run from midnight to 4 a.m. Christmas morning.

My post was on the perimeter of the air strip approximately two miles from civilization situated directly underneath Bloody Nose Ridge which was pock-marked with caves used as refuge by the Japanese during our invasion of the island.

It was well-known that those caves still held Japanese stragglers who had survived the bloody battle for Peleliu. Several of the caves had been sealed off by demolition teams using explosives which killed many of the occupants and those that were not killed during the initial operation finally suffocated or starved to death.

Since there were so many caves on the ridge, some were left open, and from time-to-time a Japanese soldier would slip down from the

Holiday shifts

No one likes to see the flashing lights of a police car in their rearview mirror. Ambulance and fire engine sirens remind us that a sudden accident or illness can drastically affect our health and all that we own may be destroyed in a house fire.

Our own efforts help little in the face of illness, accident or fire. Life is fragile.

It helps to know that there are men and women who are specifically trained to deal with these kind of emergencies every day—even on the holidays.

While most of the general population expects to be off work during these special times, our civil servants who make up the police force, fire fighting units and other emergency services, are still on duty while everyone else is enjoying the holiday festivities.

So, as you sit down to enjoy your pumpkin pie, the crackling fire of the fireplace, the laughter and joy of family gathered together, the decorated Christmas tree and the giving and receiving of gifts, remember that there are many people foregoing those things to keep our community safe, to answer when we call.

Take a moment and think about it. Sure, you may say, "They're getting paid to do it." But who can put a dollar figure on being with your family Christmas morning.

Some people may not mind working during the holidays. But few are willing to spend it responding to emergencies, rushing to an accident scene, or dealing with loss of life or property. These things are difficult to deal with even on the normal day.

Having to miss the special time with family is one thing. Spending your holiday dealings with the unhappy things of life is a sacrifice.

The effects of this type of job go beyond the men and women—they affect their families as well. The demands often breaks those who cannot cope with the pressure. Yet men and women continue to come forward to take on the challenge of serving the community. They are willing to make the sacrifice.

So, as you sit down to enjoy your pumpkin pie, the crackling fire of the fireplace, the laughter and joy of family gathered together, the decorated Christmas tree and the giving and receiving of gifts, remember that there are many people foregoing those things to keep our community safe, to answer when we call.—J.D.B.

Please (cough) let me breath

Is Surgeon General of the United States C. Everett Koop on a personal crusade? Or is he concerned with the health of our nation?

After his recent report on the health danger of cigarette smoke on smokers and non-smokers alike, it seems as though the scientific evidence is confirming Koop's stance on the ill effects of tobacco smoke.

His opponents, primarily the tobacco industry and those connected with it, claim that Koop is blinded by his personal views and that the scientific evidence isn't strong enough to back him up.

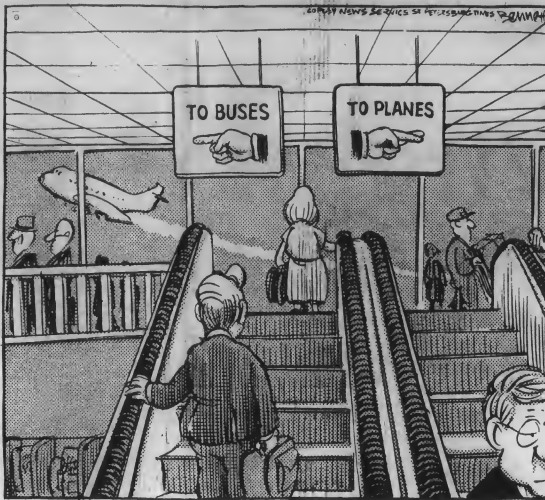

But the evidence is strong.

He cited 11 studies that appeared in scientific literature that linked smoke from cigarettes to lung cancer. Not only for the smoker but also for the non-smoker! Not only that, it is not the inhaled and exhaled smoke that is the most dangerous to non-smokers. It is the "sidestream" smoke that a burning cigarette emits in between puffs that is so damaging.

Just as all smokers are allowed to say anything they want except that which endangers others (like yelling 'Fire!' in a crowded theater when it is not true) so they are allowed to smoke anytime they want—as long as it does not hurt the people around them.

It is understood that smoking is a hard habit to kick. Addiction to the nicotine is a strong one. But smokers must be sensitive to the non-smoker. Public places and working environments must be shared. If smokers can guarantee that your smoke will not circulate into the non-smoking area, they may light up to their heart's content. If you can't guarantee it, please don't endanger the health of others.

Don't let your freedom defile clean lungs.—J.D.B.

Don't throw wrapping paper into fireplace

Fire Safety

By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

I would like to wish all of my readers a Merry Christmas. I also would like for you to have a safe Christmas.

Please do not throw the wrapping paper into the fireplace for this will create a very hot fire which could set off a chimney fire.

Christmas trees that were purchased several weeks ago are now vulnerable to catching fire because they are very dry and withered. Move the tree away from the fireplace completely. All it takes is one spark to catch the tree on fire.

Limit the lights to only when you are staying in the room. Cut them off if you leave even for a short while.

Your Virginia Beach

Firefighters will be on duty Christmas Eve and Christmas Day. These city paid firefighters never have holidays. Someone has to be on duty seven days a week. Seventy-five firefighters will be getting off duty Christmas morning and another 75 firefighters will come in fresh to pull their 24-hour tour.

So think about them or just drop by, they will be glad to see you. Think fire safety this Christmas so the firefighters won't be visiting you!!

Christmas rally? Maybe Rudolph nose...

Wall Street The Week Ahead

By George T. Stagg

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas in the canyons of Wall Street. We survived the triple witching hour last Friday with record-breaking volume. 244 million shares, 100 million in the final 30 minutes, and the DOW up 16 points on the day.

We have established firm support at the 1900 level and with seven trading sessions to go before the old year poops out, we still have hopes that Santa and his elves will come thru with some year end goodies.

According to the Stock Trader's Almanac, St. Nick comes to Wall Street nearly every year and brings a short, sweet respectable rally. In the past 34 years, Santa has failed to appear only seven times.

The rally occurs in the last four or five days and carries into the first two days of the new year with an average gain of 1.68 percent, equivalent to about 30 points in the DOW at these levels. So be good for goodness sake.

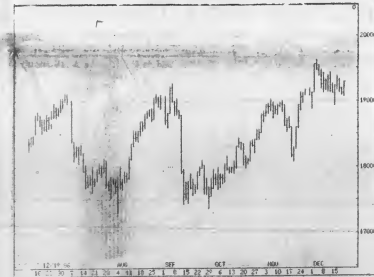

In sum, we have a resilient market, buoyed by oceans of liquidity and cash looking for higher yields; a market encountering strong support at current levels, having held above 1900 for four weeks.

It's the stuff of high drama. Our 2000 DOW paradise has been lost in three attempts in six months to reach the promised land.

We are confident about another go in the future. Remember, this is Wall Street where there is always a happy ending.

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

The spirit of giving

The spirits of the holidays are apparent everywhere. We enjoy the bright lights, happy music, and colorful decorations. Age old songs and stories are called to mind and presented to youngsters to listen, share, make their own.

For teachers, the days bring hustle, bustle, and activities galore. We also call to mind special thoughts and wonders about the new year and what it will bring out.

Everyone is familiar with Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol. Old Ebenezer Scrooge was confronted with his past, present, and future.

Teachers remember the past. They remember how many hours were spent convincing legislators and policy-makers that teachers need greater involvement, higher salaries, and more respect.

It took "A Nation At Risk," many volumes on school reform and state mandates on funding to produce a change. The change, necessary, positive, productive, may not be continued. Just because teachers received some increased benefits in the past does not mean that the Ebenezer Scrooges of 1986 see the need to follow the enlightened path.

Despite the Carnegie Commission Report, the Governor's Commission on Excellence and public mandates, policy-makers refuse to support with adequate funding the concept of quality education. Quality education is the gateway for future success.

Teachers deserve respect, equity in salary, status, and involvement. The Ebenezer Scrooges are usually short-term thinkers and don't believe the predictions handed down.

The educational predictions are well-documented: teacher shortages, overcrowded schools, lower achievement scores, and most alarmingly - children who have never been taught how to process language, compute numbers, and think logically and with reason to solve the many problems faced by our society.

Qualified, dedicated teachers pass on much more than facts, they bestow a love for learning, an understanding of the past, a compassion for involvement in the democratic process and dedication to protecting and enriching the future for all.

Quality education doesn't come cheap.

Commitment, philosophically and financially by elected representatives, determines the course. Educators, parents, and students need to let those officials know what direction the course should take.

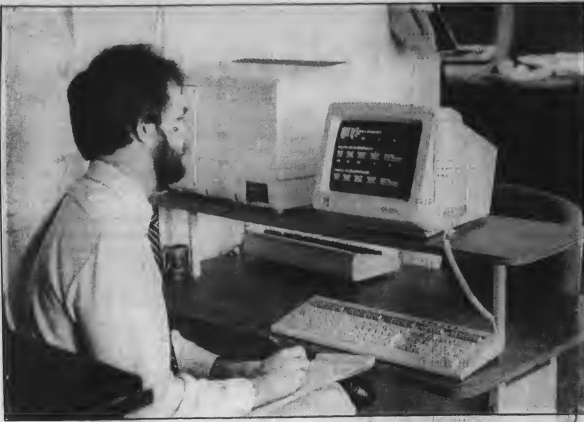

Ebenezer Scrooge decided to make the present count and brighten the future for the children he knew. His lesson should not go unnoticed this holiday.

The VBEA wishes all of the community happiness and joy this holiday and in the year ahead.

By Julia Thornton Wilson, Virginia Beach Office of Public Information

A specialized computer system is putting Virginia Beach at the forefront of mapping out its municipal future.

The system, which recently received national recognition from Public Technology, Inc. has enabled the City's Bureau of Surveys and Mapping to compile computer generated maps that reveal units as small as individual property parcels and keep them constantly updated and revised—no small feat in a community growing by around 1,000 new residents per month.

"We're one of the first municipalities in the nation to go to an integrated land record management system," says mapping supervisor Phil Baker. "One of our major resources in Virginia Beach is our land, and how we manage it determines our quality of life."

"We're one of the first municipalities in the nation to go to an integrated land record management system," says mapping supervisor Phil Baker. "One of our major resources in Virginia Beach is our land, and how we manage it determines our quality of life."

The City first addressed the need to computerize its mapping program in 1975, after several years of being unable to keep up with the growth explosion by manual mapping means.

After purchasing a computer software package and putting it to work, the mapping staff was able to produce state-of-the-art computerized maps which combined graphic details with special information files.

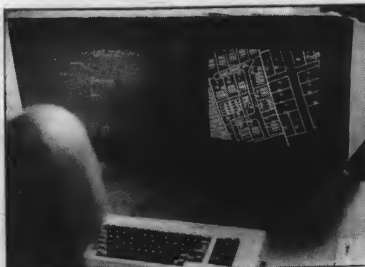

The system immediately began to pay for itself by identifying many parcels of land which had been untaxed or incorrectly taxed in the past.

The system was then upgraded in 1984 to provide even more integrated mapping functions and allow for cross-tabulated retrieval of specialized information to meet the needs of City departments, officials and planners.

In addition to the obvious real estate assessment applications, the highly sophisticated maps have been useful in graphically portraying public utilities lines, and in quickly specifying routes for the City's new automated refuse collection program. Many more uses are on the drawing table for future implementation.

"This system has opened up many avenues for us," said Baker. "Truly, these maps are worth 1,000 words."

vive you develop a thick skin. You become hardened so it doesn't affect you."

Firefighting

During holidays, fire fighters deal with different problems. At Firehouse #16 on Eight Plaza Trail, the men on 'B' shift point out that they will have duty on Christmas Day the next two years.

"Surprisingly, there are less calls during the holiday," said Rick Land, 'B' shift captain at firehouse #16.

"There are more chimney fires because people throw all the Christmas wrappings in the fire," he said, "but with fires you never know."

Tony Cooke, 36, who has been a fire fighter for 11 years, said the last few Christmases in Virginia Beach have been warm, which has meant fewer fire hazards.

"Being at the fire house on holidays means planning a little differently," said Cooke. "Up until a few years ago we had a trade policy. Guys with no family could cover for someone who did. But we can't do that anymore."

City employees are paid overtime for their holiday shifts but Land said, "I don't think the money outweighs the chance to be at home with your family."

Some might like the money so they can pay off the bills, said Clayton. "When you are on duty you wish you were home and when you are at home you wonder if the extra pay might help," he said.

Emergencies

Also "on call" during the holidays is the emergency medical service teams. They work on a volunteer basis.

Robert Matthews, 21, of Lake Edwards, works at the Davis Corner station and has voluntarily covered during Christmas Day for the last four years.

"Because I am single," said

Matthews, "I like to work on the holidays so the guys with families can be off."

"We are able to be on call from our homes," said Syd DuVal, 40, who works out of the Virginia Beach Volunteer Rescue Squad. While the firemen have to stay at the firehouse with the equipment, the rescue squads can cover from home.

"Someone will drive the ambulance to their house and be on call from there," said DuVal. "We can be with our families but we might have to leave at any time."

Both Matthews and DuVal said there are usually fewer emergency calls on Christmas Day. "People stay at home," said Matthews. "That means fewer accidents."

DuVal said throughout the year his station answers 10-15 calls each day. In his 10 years of experience he cannot remember ever going out more than four times on Christmas Day.

It may be difficult to understand how this could happen, but under combat conditions the code of dress was not strictly enforced. Cut-off trousers, sandals made from field shoes, long hair and beards made us all look pretty much the same. Our bodies were tanned from working in the blazing sun, so it is understandable that a Japanese soldier could sometimes go unnoticed, especially in a crowd, as long as he did not talk.

We used code words which contained the letter "R" which was hard for the Japanese to pronounce. If we suspected one among us to be Japanese, he had better be able to say "rice" because they had a tendency to say "lice." I heard that several were caught that way, but I have no facts to substantiate it.

As the time for my tour of duty approached, the fog had closed to convey an eerie picture of Bloody Nose Ridge which caused me some consternation. I reported to the guard shack at 11:45 and boarded the jeep that was to take me to my lonely outpost.

As the jeep pulled away I thought to myself, "What would I do if the Japanese pull a banza attack and over-run my position?" I knew that I would fight because I was trained to do so, but I would have hoped that the odds were a little more on my side.

The tour was uneventful until around 1 a.m. when I heard the distant patter of feet coming in my direction. I knew it wasn't Santa Claus.

I stepped behind a large crate that contained a Corsair fighter plane engine and waited for my strange visitor to come within the sight of my M-1 rifle.

If it was a Japanese I planned to let him pass by and then shoot, but there was always the possibility that it was one of our own marines out jogging, which many did, especially the ones that were into physical fitness. However, it did not make sense that anyone in his right mind would be out jogging at 1 a.m. Christmas Day, especially so far from the base camp.

As my visitor passed by my place of concealment, I stepped out and in my most authoritative voice shouted, "Halt and be recognized."

The stranger stopped momentarily and then started to move away in a slow jog. I fired two shots into the air, planning to send the man straight through him. I was still not sure if he was friend or foe. But if he did not stop, I knew I was justified in shooting him.

I did not relish the thought of having to kill another human being, especially on Christmas Day. Fortunately for both of us he stopped and turned back toward me. I didn't know if he was armed with a knife or a hand grenade. I did not see anything in his hands and I knew I could shoot before he could reach for a weapon.

I ordered him to lie down on the ground while I approached ready to shoot at any suspicious move. During this time he had not uttered a word which made me suspect that he was in fact the enemy down from the hills foraging for food.

I prayed that the shots I had fired would be heard at post headquarters, but had no way of knowing for sure. The telephone in the guard shack was not working so the only hope I had was that the Sergeant of the Guard would be making his periodic rounds soon.

I attempted to question him and to my amazement he spoke perfect English. He had been employed at Pearl Harbor on a construction gang and had returned to Japan just prior to the attack.

On his return to Japan he had joined the army and Peleliu was his first and last duty station. I searched him while he was still on the ground and then ordered him to stand up for a closer search.

Since I had no weapons, I relaxed somewhat and continued my questioning. I asked the fellow what he was doing running around an American held island on Christmas day.

I fired two shots into the air, planning to send the next one straight through him. I was still not sure if he was friend or foe. But if he did not stop, I knew I was justified in shooting him.

He explained that he was starving and had hoped that he could find some scraps in the garbage cans around the mess hall. He said that many of the Japanese in the caves had died from thirst, starvation or disease, but that surrender was an even worse fate because of the shame involved as all Japanese soldiers lived by the Bushido which is a moral code of feudal Japan.

I asked how many marines he had killed. He assured me that he had killed none explaining that he was a corpsman attending the wounded and claimed to have even attended some wounded Americans during the mid of the invasion of the island.

I knew he might be lying but I could not prove it. He seemed to be a decent fellow and talked about his family back in Japan. He looked to be around 30 years old but I never thought to ask him his age.

I formed in my mind the impression that this soldier was here because his country was in a war over which he had no control, the same as I, and that while we were mortal enemies, sworn to kill each other, we did have something in common.

We were far away from home on a small battle scarred island not knowing from one minute to the next whether we would ever again see our loved one.

I knew he had a mother and father and that he was frightened as I was. Perhaps, at another time and place, I would have killed him on the spot; as, I am sure, he would have killed me. But this was Christmas and he was a pitiful sight, starving, frightened and fighting for a cause that was lost.

Many thoughts flashed through my mind while I observed this enemy, whose country had pulled a sneak attack on Pearl Harbor, committed heinous atrocities on Bataan and Corregidor and was responsible for the death of some of my best friends.

B. J. Sessions outside a cave

I had never believed that hate and compassion could exist at the same time. My training and instinct was to kill but my religious upbringing, taught to me at an early age by my mother and grandmother, presented the greatest conflict I have ever experienced in my life.

The words, "Do unto others," kept going through my mind and I knew if the situation was reversed I would pray that this Japanese soldier would have compassion for me.

I gave him water from my canteen and shared my rations which consisted of a can of hash, crackers and a fig bar. He must have thought it a meal fit for a king.

While he was eating my mind drifted back to a story I had heard as a youngster about how in France during World War I on Christmas Eve the Allies and Germans declared a temporary truce and came out of the trenches to meet on the battlefield and share a few moments of celebration before returning to start killing each other again.

Realizing that I had made up my mind to let the man go, I told him that he had ten minutes to get back to his caves. I also advised him that if I ever saw him again he would never make it back.

As he moved off into the fog at the bottom of Bloody Nose Ridge, I caught a glimpse of him making his lonely ascent back to his prison in the caves. I knew, as I am sure he did, that he would never see his homeland again.

Several minutes after his departure, the Sergeant of the Guard arrived to check my post. It was obvious that no one had heard my two shots when he said, "How are things going?" "Fine," I lied as he pulled away.

At that moment, I swear I saw a shooting star pass over the top of Bloody Nose Ridge.

As I continued to walk my post, I realized that I was humming "I'll Be Home for Christmas."

I did make it home for future Christmases but I doubt that my Japanese soldier did. He probably starved to death or was killed by the next marine who saw him as he came down searching for food.

I'll never know, as I left the island a few weeks after this strange encounter.

Until recently I have kept this secret with me, but now I feel it can be told. The Japanese are now our friends and most of the hatred and bitterness has passed.

For a long time I questioned my actions in letting a prisoner go but now I feel serene in knowing I gave the greatest Christmas gift of all. I gave a man his life.

the project and still not interrupt traffic flow further."

When construction on the plaza is completed in late March, there will be fourteen traffic lanes through the toll station, with a lane reserved for HOV traffic during rush hours.

The overall construction project at the toll plaza and Route 44 widening to permit extension of the HOV program eastward to Laskin Road has been expanded further to include installation of more than a mile of privacy fence on the north and south sides of Route 44 in the vicinity of the toll plaza.

The eight-foot-high fence will shield residential subdivisions in the immediate area from the roadway widening which will improve privacy for the neighborhoods. There will be approximately 4,200 feet of fencing erected on the south side of the highway and 1,300 feet on the north side.

The fence phase should be completed by the time the new toll lanes become operational. The modification program for the toll lane islands will provide higher concrete dividers between lanes, with impact attenuators to absorb the shock if they are struck by approaching vehicles.

Toll plaza and Route 44 construction in the area is part of an extended improvement program for the Expressway that included the I-64 flyover to

I-264 and Route 44; construction of collector distributor lanes in the vicinity of Newtown Road and I-64; construction of a new Newtown Road interchange and widening of Route 44 from three to four lanes in each direction from I-64 to just east of Laskin Road, to permit the introduction of the HOV concept on the highway.

The flyover opened to traffic in December, 1985, the collector lanes in the past summer and HOV was initiated from Newtown Road to the Toll Plaza last September 24.

East of the Toll Plaza the addition of two more lanes from the plaza to Rosemont Road is essentially complete but they have not been opened to traffic; construction of additional lanes between Rosemont Road and London Bridge Creek is under construction, and construction of additional lanes between London Bridge Creek and Laskin Road has been completed, but not opened to traffic.

The widening of Route 44 from two to three lanes in each direction from Laskin Road to Parks Avenue has been completed and opened to traffic on Dec. 3. Also a new interchange at First Colonial Road was opened to traffic in October.

Those elements not yet completed should be ready for traffic in early Spring, rounding out the major improvement program for the Expressway that has extended over a four-year period.

Areas of Kempsville Rec Center to close during renovation

Three areas of the Virginia Beach Recreation Center-Kempsville will be closed at different times to allow for air conditioning renovation work.

From now until Jan. 16, the Center's exercise room will be closed to the public. The weight program is cancelled during this closing.

Robertson's son named pres.

The board of directors of The Christian Broadcasting Network, Inc., recently named M. G. (Pat) Robertson chairman of the board and chief executive officer. Timothy B. Robertson has been appointed president and chief administrative officer of CBN. Both positions will be effective Jan. 1, 1987.

These appointments will allow, according to a CBN news release, a division of responsibility which will enable CBN to address its recent growth areas, particularly CBN Cable Network and international ministries, in the most efficient manner.

CBN, Inc., was founded 25 years ago by Pat Robertson who, with initial capital of $70, purchased a UHF television station in Portsmouth. Today the ministry includes one of the largest cable networks in the nation, an international relief arm called Operation Blessing, and the world's most watched religious talk show, "The 700 Club." Also included in CBN's umbrella are a Middle East Television Division; Continental Broadcasting, Inc., which consists of commercial broadcast facilities; Victor King Video, a commercial home video production operation; and CBN University, a fully accredited graduate school.

Timothy B. Robertson, 32, currently serves as executive vice president for broadcast and video enterprises with CBN. In this capacity, Robertson is responsible for CBN's cable, programming, marketing, production, and broadcast network aspects. His experience includes 19 years of continuous involvement in the various phases of broadcast production and management. He has served as vice president and general manager of WXNE-TV, Boston, Mass., and has worked as an associate director, associate producer and field producer for "The 700 Club." CBN's international flagship program, Robertson's international experience includes operational and managerial responsibilities in South America and the Middle East as well.

In the past four years CBN Cable's subscriber level has grown to where it now numbers over 33 million, according to the press release.

Robertson serves on the boards of the Cable TV Advertising Bureau, National Academy of Cable Programming, the National Cable Television Association's Committee, and the Satellite Network Committee.

He earned a bachelor of arts degree in English from the University of Virginia, a master of divinity degree from Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary and has completed the executive program in business administration at the Graduate School of Business, Columbia University.

Timothy Robertson is married to the former Lisa Nelson of the Denver, Colorado, area and has three children. Robertson is a member of the vestry of Galilee Episcopal Church in Virginia Beach.

Matt Werth, 15, is 4-H citizenship winner

A 15-year-old Virginia Beach 4-H member who led a campaign to collect aluminum cans for recycling to raise money for flood victims in Brazil is one of nine national winners in the 4-H citizenship program.

Matt Werth, 3217 Barborough Way, received a $1,000 scholarship from the Coca-Cola Foundation, the program sponsor. He also was honored for his achievements at the Virginia Club Congress held at Virginia Tech in June.

Selected by the Cooperation Extension System, the national winners were presented with their awards during the 65th National 4-H Congress in Chicago, Dec. 6-11. Awards are arranged by National 4-H Council.

Werth, son of Mary J. Werth, is a high school freshman and plans a career as a carpenter. He is a six-year 4-H member.

The Virginia Beach youth met two leaders of 4-S, a program in Brazil that is similar to 4-H in this country, when they visited his community. He posed for a photo with them that was later published in a newsletter in Brazil.

"I felt as if I had made friends and was upset to hear they had a severe flood after their return to Brazil," he said. The successful recycling campaign raised money to buy seed corn or bean seed in Brazil.

"Picking up trash and litter gave me a sense of responsibility for my share of how my city looks," Werth said.

Werth

As a result, he continued with his recycling efforts and said that in the past two years his 4-H group has recycled 16,976 pounds of paper, 5,140 pounds of glass, 2,238 pounds of aluminum and 292 pounds of steel cans.

"All of this has passed through my house at one time or another on its way to the recycling centers," he said.

When the city was hit by a severe drought, he helped cut his family's water use by 30 percent and waged a public education program to reduce water usage citywide.

The youth also served as the teen leader of a group of latchkey children, teaching them how to protect, feed and entertain themselves when they are home alone while their parents are working.

Man, woman sought in Blackwater burglaries

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers is offering a cash reward for information on burglaries that occurred in the rural Blackwater section of the city. Four break-ins occurred on Wednesday, Dec. 3, where guns and jewelry were taken.

The homes were in the following locations: 6400 block of Blackwater Road; 2900 block of Indian Creek Road; 1900 block of Hungarian Road in Chesapeake; and on Blackwater Road in North Carolina, just over the Virginia Beach line. The homes are in close proximity of one another and all were burglarized during the daytime.

The guns that were stolen include four Remington 12, 16, and 20 gauge shotguns; two Browning 16 gauge shotguns; one Fox 410 gauge, double barrel shotgun; one Sears 12 gauge shotgun; one Century 16 gauge shotgun; one Marlin .22 caliber rifle; one Inland .30 caliber rifle; one Remington .308 caliber rifle; one Inland .30 caliber carbine. A large quantity of jewelry was also taken.

Detectives are looking for a man and woman who were seen at one of the houses in an early 1970s model, tan Ford Maverick, or similar car. Both are white and in their 20s. He is thin, has long, straight brown hair, and was wearing a dark head band. She has long black hair and a round face.

Anyone with information about these or any other burglaries are asked to call Crime Solvers at 427-0000. A cash reward of up to $1,000 is paid to anyone who provides information leading to an arrest or the recovery of the stolen property. No names or court appearances are required to collect a reward.

More books to be accounted for when libraries engage new security system

The Virginia Beach Public Library system is activating an electronic security system on Friday, Jan. 2, 1987, to deter unauthorized removal of library materials. All bags, purses, and brief cases being carried by anyone setting off the security alarm will be subject to examination by library staff. The security system poses no risk to pacemakers, pregnant women, undeveloped film in cameras, or personally-owned audio or video cassettes.

The library recognizes that the majority of library patrons abide by the rules for borrowing and using library materials. These people will be unaffected by the security system. Library patrons will have access to more materials as a result of the security system detecting accidental or deliberate removal of library materials. The system will affect the city's five branch libraries, but not the law library or municipal reference.

The security system was made possible by a grant from the Virginia Beach Public Library Endowment Foundation. Citizens wishing to learn about the Endowment Foundation or the security system may contact the Department of Public Libraries at 427-4321.

Mapping program receives recognition

Virginia Beach has won the 1986 Public Technology, Inc. (PTI) Technology achievement Award for the City's "Computerization of Parcel-base Maps and Land Record Program."

This PTI recognition, afforded to only 14 communities nationwide, was made public Dec. 2 at the National League of Cities Congress of Cities in San Antonio, Texas.

"We're very excited about this award because it offers national recognition for a program we're extremely proud of and the people who made it possible," said L. David Little, Surveys and Mapping superintendent. "In addition, this enhances the City's growing reputation for innovation."

Each year, PTI honors those communities whose programs and methods have helped cut costs and improved the effectiveness of public services.

PTI is the cooperative research and development organization of North American Cities and Counties and is the technical arm of the International City Management Association and the National League of Cities.

Long distance flying

Virginia Beach aviator, with 17,000 flight hours, says Voyager crew's worst enemy was mental fatigue

By James D. Barr
Staff Writer

Grueling mental fatigue. That was probably the hardest aspect of the Voyager flight, according to Captain Darrell Gordon, a 15-year Virginia Beach resident and assistant chief pilot for Piedmont Airlines at Norfolk International Airport.

And Gordon should know. He is a third generation pilot who for the past 35 years has been flying privately and professionally.

"The day I turned 16 I soloed for the first time," he said. Since then, he's logged thousands of flight hours cooped inside tiny cockpits.

Gordon, 51, who lives in King's Grant, said he followed the Voyager flight with interest since he has had personal experience in long distance flying.

"That's one of the problems of mental stress. You can be looking straight at something and not see it."—Pilot Darrell Gordon.

"When you are in the air seven or eight hours," he said, "you are really working 10 to 12 hours" because of the preflight and postflight details that are necessary. That can be a long day," he added.

"A lot of people think that a pilot's work day is easy." But Gordon stresses that the mental strain is tough.

"The number one problem for pilots on long trips is mental stress," he said. "With the Voyager pilots, this would have been compounded by the small space and dehydration."

In most commercial airplanes with their pressurized cabins, for example, the humidity is only three to five percent. "Pilots even use creams on their skin because it gets so dry," said Gordon.

With the Voyager pilots, Dick Rutan and Jeana Yeager, the stressful conditions would have been multiplied.

"Even being in a small airplane on a long trip can be tough," said Gordon. "With no bathroom, no space to exercise in even to get up and walk around, you have to have someone to back you up."

Gordon said on his commercial flights the crew goes through a "challenge and answer" routine. "Each person goes through the checklist," he said. "A constant check and recheck" of all the instruments.

"That's one of the problems of mental stress. You can be looking straight at something and not see it," he said.

Gordon echoed the Voyager pilots when he said that boredom is not a big problem.

"There is something to do every minute," Gordon said. "You are constantly scanning. There is a flow pattern and you get to know what to look at all the time. And while you are looking at the instrument panel there is also the monitoring of the airwaves that must be done."

Voyager success makes us look to the future - editorial, page 2

"In the U.S. you are constantly in radio contact," Gordon continued. "On the real long hauls, like over the Atlantic, you check in every so often. Sometimes you do this at scheduled times or when you pass certain latitude readings."

Gordon's experience over the years has seen him on planes of every size.

"I've been on everything from the DC-3, the workhorse of World War II, to the 727's holding 164 passengers."

17,000 flight hours

Gordon has logged over 17,000 flight hours, his longest flight being from New York to Tokyo, landing there only long enough to refuel and take off again for Hong Kong.

"It took 18 hours altogether," he said, "and I felt it when I got off the plane."

Reflecting on the Voyager flight, Gordon said a big danger while flying would have been the weather.

"With the satellite communication of today, and I'm sure they had the most up-to-date equipment, the navigation would be no real problem," said Gordon. "But the weather above 10,000 feet can get violent. With their light plane and the strong winds, they probably really bounced around."

In his years of flying, he noted that the bouncing can be dangerous for two reasons.

"Physically you can get hurt," he said. "But also, sometimes you bounce around so much your eyes can't focus. You think the plane is moving around but it is your eyes that are vibrating and it looks like the instruments are shaking."

"Physically you can get hurt...sometimes you bounce around so much your eyes can't focus. You think the plane is moving around but it is your eyes that are vibrating and it looks like the instruments are shaking"—Pilot Darrell Gordon.

When asked about the effects of the Voyager flight, Gordon said he thought they have proven a lot, "especially with the light weight alloys, their capabilities, new standards for flight range and even greater distance records."

"They did something that everyone who loves aviation would want to try," he continued.

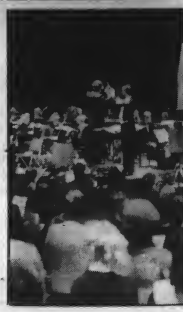

When asked if he would have liked to have been on the flight he said without hesitation, "I'd love to try it. The only problem is I would probably have to stand in line with plenty of other guys who would be willing."

Local watercolorist shows at the Municipal Gallery

Works of Virginia Beach artist Cynthia Andrews will be showing at the Municipal Center gallery from Jan. 5 to Feb. 2.

She will display 12 watercolor works, chiefly realistic scenes of the oceanfront.

A native of the area, the artist has worked 10 to 12 years in watercolor. This is her preferred medium, although she is proficient in other mediums as well.

Andrews has shown for the past three years in both the Arts Center's Neptune Festival Art Show and Norfolk's Ghent Art Festival. She has an Associate Degree in Fine Arts from Tidewater Community College.

Andrews' goal is to teach art. She has taught small classes at Tidewater Community College and has tutored children individually. She has also worked on commission and has done renderings.

Andrews has two small children, and paints in her studio at home.

The Municipal Gallery is located in the City Administration Building at the courthouse complex. Hours are Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The show is free and open to the public.

For more information, call the Virginia Beach Arts Center at 425-0000.

City Council debates new S.P.C.A. site

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The Virginia Beach S.P.C.A. is moving, but the permission didn't come easy.

Local veterinarians fought a conditional use permit for the new site because, they said, an animal hospital went beyond the purposes of the S.P.C.A.

The S.P.C.A. applied for a conditional use permit for an animal hospital pound, shelter and kennel on a 2.5 acre site on the east side of Holland road, south of Landstown Road.

The present site, off General Booth Boulevard, is being crowded out by growth along the General Booth Boulevard. F. Reid Ervin, S.P.C.A. spokesman told Council last week, and is poorly drained and was not a good site to begin with.

The new site will allow the S.P.C.A. to build a larger 10,000-square foot building in an area where residential growth is not likely to occur because of the Navy easements over the property. The site is within the AICUZ (Air Compatible Use) Zone 2 and accident potential zone C surrounding Naval Air Station Oceana.

Charles Salle, attorney representing the S.P.C.A., said that some confusion exists on "what the application is all about." He said the S.P.C.A. is merely trying to relocate its present facility. Pound or shelter, whatever the facility is called, he said, it will not be a commercial kennel. It will not have a hospital, he said, but the S.P.C.A. anticipates leasing space to a veterinarian, which is what is being done at the present site.

He said the S.P.C.A. was before Council for a decision on a land-use item, not on competition among veterinarians.

He said the facility would not have the type of kennel that boards dogs, that it would not have a hospital, and that the veterinarian would not be an employee of the S.P.C.A. The S.P.C.A. only wanted to do at the new site what it was doing at the present site.

After hearing objections from the veterinarians, Salle remarked, "I think I'll go home and throw out my James Herriot books. Herriot (All Creatures Great and Small) writes about veterinarians."

Elizabeth Siles, a life board member, said of the present shelter which opened in 1969, "For years we were awash in water... We sat in green slime."

She said the shelter handled over 100,000 animals a year, that the Holland Road site would be more accessible and more central and that the S.P.C.A. would not be operating a boarding kennel because it would lose its tax exemption if it did. She also said it would not operate a clinic, but just rent space to a veterinarian and that the S.P.C.A. would carry out its present activities but in a more efficient manner.

Ron L. Creamer, Virginia Beach Area Sales Manager, has been recognized for outstanding sales achievement during the Sperry and Hutchinson Company's President's Challenge Cup III Sales Campaign. Creamer ranked in the top 10% in the selling of new business.

Bill Penwell, President of S & H, recently presented Creamer with a President's Challenge Cup Award for this achievement. This award was presented to Creamer and other S & H sales achievers at a gala awards dinner during a spectacular four day trip to New York City.

Creamer has been employed by S & H since October, 1982.

Virginia Beach EMS honored by governor

The Virginia Beach Division of Emergency Medical Services recently received the Governor's Award.

Named as the Outstanding EMS Agency for the Commonwealth of Virginia, the City's 11 all-volunteer rescue squads were noted for their many innovations in the area of pre-hospital patient care. Recognized in the Jan. 1986 edition of the Journal of Emergency Medical Service as the only all-volunteer rescue service among the nation's 100 most populous cities, Virginia Beach's EMS is also known for several "firsts" in the Commonwealth.

"We're pleased to receive this statewide recognition of our program. It's the end result of countless hours of dedication by over 500 members," said EMS Director Bruce W. Edwards.

Circuit Court renovation work to cause temporary relocation

Several areas of the Virginia Beach Circuit Court building will be closed off to the public during renovation work designed to expand the building's court capacity.

The building which houses Circuit Court #4 will be undergoing renovation for the creation of Circuit Court #7. Throughout the renovation process, signs will be posted with regard to designated temporary relocation sites.

During the initial reconstruction process, the ceiling type was noted to be an acoustical plaster, commonly used in commercial construction prior to 1972. As this type of plaster sometimes contains asbestos, the city requested testing to be done by Marine Chemist Service, Inc.

Testing determined that the plaster did in fact contain asbestos, which, when disturbed such as during renovation, can flake off causing a potential health hazard to building occupants.

Although the present condition of the ceiling material and the results of ongoing air sampling tests have revealed no hazardous exposure to building occupants, to date, the city's Safety Office nevertheless recommended, per EPA guidelines, that during reconstruction, affected areas be sealed off and the asbestos material removed as part of the renovation process.

Voyager—Looking to the future

Last week Dick Rutan and Jeana Yeager became the first people ever to circumnavigate the globe in an airplane without landing or refueling. Their historic flight was followed by millions of people around the world and in the nine days they were aloft, their progress and problems were a part of every news broadcast.

Helping them along the way was their complicated navigational system. Being tied into a complex satellite system allowed them and the world to know exactly where they were and what they would encounter ahead.

America should be proud of this achievement. We have placed men on the moon, gathered material from other planets and sent satellites to the edge of our solar system. Today's technology continues to allow us to do new things, understand more, reach new horizons.

But do we know in what direction we are going? With the success of the Voyager, new opportunities open up. The ramifications of what they did will make an impact on more than the aviation industry.

No one can say what the final effect of such an event will be. Without a doubt there will be other attempts and new records set. Man has always wanted to go farther, higher and faster and been able to do it.

But in the midst of our technological race, do we have our own personal "navigational equipment" to safely guide our society? The flight pointed out the biggest limiting factor in endeavors such as these: Man is limited by himself.

Where man has been able to devise machines capable of exploring our universe, he is at the same time confronted by the frailties and shortcomings of what the human body can endure.

The Voyager's nine day flight took its toll on the pilots. They were tested and thankfully, were able to respond. As the fanfare dies down, the Voyager flight should be put into perspective. More than a record-setting plane ride, it shows man's ever-present desire to control his world; testing his limits, pushing forward.

With the accomplishment of the Voyager in the record books, new goals will be set. And everytime the stakes are raised, whether it is to go a little bit faster or a little bit farther, greater risks are taken. Let us hope that our desire to move forward is tempered by the wisdom to know how to do safely.—J.D.B.

The New Year Ahead

As we enter the new year, it is time to assess 1986. It is also time to look ahead to the possibilities of 1987.

Each of us, in our own way, looks back on the things that affected our lives this past year. Though we can say that one year is behind us, I think most would agree that the quality of life is much more important than the quantity.

And therein lies the question! How do you measure quality of life?

All of us answer that question in some way. We look at our bank accounts and other material possessions which are easy enough to see. Then we figure in our vocational status; things like promotions and raises (or their opposites) help us get our bearings. With greater difficulty we allow for things like our social life, mental health, marital status and future plans.

Somewhere we come to a conclusion about where we have gone in the past year and where we hope to go in the future. It would be nice to think everyone has had a "good" year. Sadly, it is not the case.

As we look forward, the opportunity to better our city lies before us. 1986, for good and bad, is behind us. Now is the time to prepare for the future.—J.D.B.

Messiah Sing-Along

This year's Fourth Annual "Messiah Sing-Along" was again a success. It is this type of event that makes Virginia Beach a special place.

The efforts of each of the Virginia Beach Community Orchestra members, its director David S. Kunkel, and the soloists who gave of their time and talent should gain the highest praise. For such an event, there are many others who help in the background. To everyone who was involved, thank you.

The whole community benefits because of these performances. Virginia Beach is enriched and culturally enhanced. No value can be placed on events like these. Hats off to all those who help to make Virginia Beach a better place to live.—J.D.B.

Discipline at College Park

Editor:

Recently publicity about discipline at College Park Elementary School has cast aspersions on an excellent faculty and school. Confronted with allegations, the School Board has requested that the central administration investigate the charges and that investigation is in progress. Investigations of this nature must be thorough and take time. In the meantime, teachers at that school feel that their best efforts to provide fair and just discipline have been challenged and that their professional reputations have been seriously damaged.

I know that the discipline program at their school is sound and that they carry out the program with a reasoned common sense approach. To date, I have interviewed 29 individuals at the school and have discussed the discipline program and how they carry out discipline in their school. Not one person I talked to had a derogatory word to say about the discipline program or how it is being implemented.

The question that many of these teachers are agonizing over is how do they defend themselves and their school against allegations that have been taken so far out of context as to become preposterous? In the eyes of hundreds of parents and students they need no defense, because they all know that their teachers are very good and that the discipline at their school is fair and just. In the eyes of the community that doesn't know the teachers and staff at College Park by deed, they can gain comfort in the fact that College Park School just last year was designated a U.S. Department of Education model school and one of the reasons it was selected was due to the discipline program cooperatively developed by the administration and staff.

I am confident that when the central administration finishes the investigation, the school and its faculty will be commended for excellent discipline. While they wait, I offer the faculty and staff my utmost support and confidence.

Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel publishes travel events brochure

For Virginia Beach travelers who like to time their vacations to coincide with key regional events, the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel has something that may prove invaluable when planning the itinerary—the 1987 Winter/Spring Travel Events Brochure.

Aware of the eastern region's popularity as a tourist draw, the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel publishes free seasonal brochures twice a year. These are designed to outline the area's many cultural and recreational activities.

The just-published brochure details special events, festivals, celebrations, and other cultural happenings along the eastern shores of Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, North Carolina and Pennsylvania between January 1987 and June 1987.

Listings include such events as the Chincoteague National Wildlife Refuge Summer Programs in Chincoteague, Va.; Chesapeake Bay Boat Show in Baltimore, Md.; and Philadelphia Flower Show in Philadelphia, Pa. Each listing gives a brief description of the event along with a telephone number for motorists to call for more information.

The 17.6-mile Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel, which connects Virginia Beach and Norfolk with Virginia's Eastern Shore, provides motorists with a fast, convenient route to reach special winter and spring events up and down the East Coast.

Free copies of the travel events brochure can be obtained by writing: Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel, Department LF, Cape Charles, Virginia, 23310.

Art News Arts Center students exhibit landscapes

Eight local artists will be represented at the Humana Gallery, a satellite gallery for art sponsored by the Virginia Beach Arts Center, between Jan. 5 and Feb. 2.

The show was curated by Virginia Beach artist and Virginia Beach Arts Center instructor Suzanne Stevens, who chose work from her VBAC class "Landscape on Location." The class has been running for seven years, meeting weekly for outdoor painting at Azalea Gardens, Redwing Park, Fort Story, Pungo, Lynnhaven Inlet, and other parks and oceanfront sites.

Participating artists include: Betty Banks, Betty Bonnie, Carolyn Courtney, Susan Check, Gray Dodson, Virginia Reid, Rae Stein and Sharon Swerman.

Of the artists, Stevens says, "I have worked with these women on and off for the past seven years and have been quite impressed with their dedication to their art. What they all have in common is open-ended approach to learning, perseverance, and enough pride and humility to take criticism well. The students have grown immensely over the years, and in turn, I have learned from them."

The Humana Gallery is located in the Bayside Humana Hospital at 800 Independence Boulevard. Hours are Monday through Saturday from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. The show is free and open to the public.

Western art exhibited at Arts Center

The Virginia Beach Arts Center will present an exhibition of Non-Traditional Western Art Jan. 9 through Feb. 8. Included will be seven contemporary artists who use non-traditional approaches to Western United States subjects. Featured artists are Anne Bousquet of Norfolk; Ken Holder of Bloomington, Illinois; Peter Jagoda of Yuma, Arizona; Dan Kiaz of Norman, Oklahoma; Mark Klett of Tempe, Arizona; Virginia Van Horn of Norfolk; and Curt Walters of Missoula, Montana.

Dan Kiaz exhibits complex silkscreen prints which portray an imaginary Western hero named El Diablo. El Diablo is a skeleton cowboy who journeys through the Southwest. Kiaz teaches printmaking at the University of Oklahoma.

Mark Klett of Tempe, Arizona, shows photographs which incorporate artifacts and puns into classically beautiful compositions. Loosely based on nineteenth century geological survey photographs, Klett's work addresses "the many conflicting values and attitudes which are shaping a new landscape just as powerfully as geologic forces in the past." Klett has received three NEA Fellowships and is Studio Manager at the Photography Collaborative of Arizona State University.

Peter Jagoda, a Professor of Art at Arizona Western College, exhibits jewelry. His small objects are like spurs found on cowboy boots. Jagoda's spurs were most recently seen in Jewelry, USA, at the American Craft Museum in New York City.

Two Norfolk artists are included with three-dimensional works. Anne Bousquet, a printmaking instructor at Old Dominion University, shows an eighteen-panel installation combining collage elements in mixed media assemblage. Virginia Van Horn, an instructor of Art at Norfolk State University, exhibits a neon horse suspended from the gallery ceiling.

Also included are photographs by Montana photographer Curt Walters and paintings by Illinois Western artist Ken Holder. For more information, contact the Arts Center at 425-0000.

Music lovers from Virginia Beach and the surrounding communities crowded into the Virginia Beach Pavilion recently to take part in the Fourth Annual "Messiah Sing-Along."

The growing enthusiasm over the event was readily apparent as every copy of the score for Handel's Messiah that went on sale before the performance was gone long before the program began.

Nearly 700 people played the part of the chorus as the Virginia Beach Community Orchestra, led by Director David Kunkel, supplied the music.

The evening started with the audience warming-up with two traditional Christmas carols, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing" and "O Come, All Ye Faithful," and a practice run through the more complicated parts of the "Messiah."

As Kunkel directed the orchestra, Dr. Carl Gilmer faced the enthusiastic audience/chorus and led them through their parts.

While the audience enjoyed singing the more familiar parts of Handel's "Messiah," they were also well entertained by the fine performance of the four guest soloists.

Gilmer, director of music and organist at Galilee Episcopal Church in Virginia Beach, along with his responsibilities as song leader, started out the program with his warm tenor voice.

He was followed by John Reinhardt and his deep bass voice. Reinhardt, also a resident of Virginia Beach, has performed in all four of the Messiah Sing-Alongs.

Lorraine Jackson and City Councilwoman Barbara Henley sang the rest of the solos and then combined for a final duet. Their contralto and soprano voices played off one another well and set the stage for the grande finale, the famed "Hallelujah" chorus.

As the time neared for this last section, you could feel the excitement build in the concert hall. This is what the event is all about.

After the last note was sung, the audience broke into a warm and long applause in appreciation for the wonderful performance.

Donations totaling $535 given after the event went to the Joy Fund. The event was sponsored by the City of Virginia Beach through the Arts and Humanities Commission.

An ordinance which would have lowered the water resource recovery fees established in January was removed from a recent City Council meeting agenda.

The fees take the place of the developer line fee and are based on the number of drainage fixture units in new construction.

The proposed ordinance recommends a reduction from $95 to $75 per drainage fixture Jan. 1, 1987 and afterward.

The fee from Jan. 6 to June 30 was $32 per fixture and from July 1 to Dec. 31, $63 a fixture.

The object of the new fees was to collect $2,383 per average account toward supplying funds needed for the Lake Gaston Water supply project. According to City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck, research has indicated that the $2,383 figure could be reached with the $75 fee.

Builders have opposed the fees because of the increased cost it would add to new construction.

Constance Pozniak, representing the South Hampton Roads Veterinarians Association, said she was concerned about the animal hospital. The hospital, she said, would be in violation of the State Charter.

Several years ago when the shelter had attempted to operate a clinic in connection with the shelter to care for the lost or unwanted animals, the veterinarians sued and won in Circuit Court. The State Supreme Court upheld the decision of the lower court, that the S.P.C.A. would be in violation of its charter if it operated a hospital.

Pozniak also said that five veterinarians are located in the vicinity of the new site. She also questioned the need for a 10,000-square foot building for 115 animals, when she can care for 75 dogs and cats in 3300 square feet. She said that if the individual veterinarian wants to set up an office on the S.P.C.A. property, the applications should be handled separately.

Mayor Robert G. Jones asked her whether Council was the appropriate forum to raise questions. "This is just for the use of land," he said.

"Are you saying that the veterinarians in the area provide medical care to the animals gratis?" asked Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf. Oberndorf said that when she heard the earlier debate (which led to the court suit) she understood that the only reason the S.P.C.A. tried to get a veterinarian in the facility was to care for animals in the shelter.

She said that some people in the community like to adopt animals but cannot afford veterinarian fees. She said the elderly on fixed incomes and parents who want to get pets for their children may in this category.

Pozniak said that she did not give free care, that she could not afford to, but that she has given discounts.

Dr. James Kollar, said that the sign on the property advertising the use permit application was misleading in that the hospital was not mentioned. He opposed the hospital permit, and said he hoped that "they don't want to get involved in competing."

He asked whether the S.P.C.A. needed the new site if they did not want to expand and have a hospital. "I don't want my tax money to be used against me," he said.

Dr. Joe McKinney said he had no objection to the relocation, but only to the request for an animal hospital. Make it a separate issue, he said.

Judy Cofield, an attorney representing the South Hampton Roads Veterinarians Association, also mentioned the Supreme Court decision. She said never did the S.P.C.A. give medical services free, and that prior to the litigation, did not restrict activities to indigents. She said the S.P.C.A. accepted "Master Charge, Visa, gold or green, no matter."

She said the S.P.C.A. did not tell the truth when applying for the permit. She said that her clients were not permitted to see the lease which would be offered the veterinarian. The S.P.C.A. by law is not permitted to have residential or commercial kennels, she said.

Traffic violations continue to increase

Citing drivers for disregarding a traffic signal or a stop sign has increased, but the number of violations are increasing at an even faster pace, according to Police Chief Charles Wall.

Councilman Albert Balko recently remarked on the apparent high number of drivers going through yellow lights and asked City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck to look into the enforcement of the traffic violations.

A report submitted by Wall shows that during the period from Jan. 1 through Nov. 1 enforcement of these two traffic laws have actually increased for 1986 as compared to 1985. However, he said, the significant increase in the volume of traffic, particularly at controlled intersections has resulted in a greater number of these violations so that while more drivers are being cited, a larger number of violations are occurring that are undetected.

In 1985, 2,113 summonses were issued for disregarding a traffic signal and 920 for disregarding a stop sign. The total number of summonses issued for moving violations was 28,095.

Of the violations in 1986, 2,665 were for disregarding a traffic signal and 1,404 for disregarding a stop sign. The total number of moving violations this year was 33,992.

Figures indicate, said Wall, a 26 percent increase in the enforcement of violations for disregarding a traffic signal and 53 percent increase for disregarding a stop sign, and a 20 percent increase in the enforcement of all moving violations.

City considering more City Hall land

City Council recently authorized City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck to negotiate a contract for third-party financing for the purchase of 74.77 acres of land adjoining the Municipal Center at an estimated cost of $5,492,116.

Financing proposals from the Bank of Virginia and the First Union Leasing Group are being considered.

The property includes 36.77 acres authorized for acquisition July 7 at a cost of $4,492,116, and 38 acres which the owner has offered for sale to the city for $1 million by Dec. 31.

The land is expected to be paid for by the sale of city-owned land adjacent to Route 44, Baxter Road and the proposed flyover.

Virginia Beach employees inducted into City Hall of Fame

Three City of Virginia Beach employees recently received special awards during the City's Service Awards program.

Leonard Kandrot, Elizabeth K. Lett, and L. David Little were inducted into the City Employee Hall of Fame. This award is special, because employees from throughout the city are nominated, then chosen by a committee of their peers. The recognition is designed to showcase those employees who truly "go the extra mile" in their hard work and dedication to the city.

"I am extremely impressed by the outstanding qualities each winner portrays," said City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck as he gave out the awards.

Leonard Kandrot is a distribution clerk for the Mail Distribution Bureau in General Services. His duties center around delivering the city's mail and he is a familiar sight around the Municipal Complex. He is well known for the special little things he does, like putting the mail in plastic bags he brings home to protect it on rainy days, and the way he often delivers Print Shop and other materials around the complex on his lunch hour. He even keeps the city's prisoners in mind by bringing them old magazines to look through.

As one of the letters nominating him states, "Len is truly an asset to the city. He always has a ready smile and cheerful attitude when he brings our mail to us. We never have to worry about getting correspondence out on time when Len is on the job."

Echoes another nomination form, "His attitude of 'What can I do to help?' and ability to provide that help in a timely fashion marks him as a valuable contributor in making government work in the City of Virginia Beach."

The next Hall of Fame inductee,

Elizabeth K. Lett, began working for the city as a library aide when she was still in high school and since that time has progressed to her current position of library supervisor for the Extension Services Division. She is known for her caring attitude, problem-solving skills and leadership strengths.

These qualities can be summed up by the letter one of her employees wrote when nominating her to the Hall of Fame.

"From the most menial tasks to the most intricate chore, Liz took the time to explain each and every detail until she was sure that I fully understood...I often take Liz for granted and sometimes don't realize just how much she has helped me not only with my work, but with my self-confidence and my self-esteem."

As another letter adds, "Elizabeth K. Lett is an asset to not only the city of Virginia Beach, but more importantly, to the citizens served by our city government."

The final inductee into this year's Hall of Fame is L. David Little who began working for the city in 1965 and serves as superintendent of Surveys and Mapping in Public Works. He is known for his innovative approach to meeting the needs of the city for the future as well as the present. He has been instrumental in initiating state-of-the-art mapping programs that have brought the city national attention.

As one of his nomination letters states, "He has played a major role in the development of the city of Virginia Beach's computerized mapping program, which has placed our city in the forefront of such programs across the nation."

Another statement sheds additional light on him. "Mr. Little truly demonstrates the motto 'dedicated to serve'...not only his fellow employees, but also the people."

Service award honor employees for work well done

The spotlight was shining on special employees of the City of Virginia Beach as the Personnel Department sponsored the 16th Annual Service Awards Program. Designed to commend service performed by municipal employees, and to recognize that an employee's contribution grows each year, this program also seeks to encourage career employment with the city.

All full-time merit employees who have attained permanent status are eligible to participate. Awards are given based on the number of continuous months of service, with employees receiving pin awards, certificates, and cash awards, or a combination of these according to their length of service.

This year, approximately 1,600 cash and/or pin awards were given to deserving employees, with cash awards totaling around $310,000.

In addition, 28 employees were honored for serving the city for 25 or more years, and 21 people who retired in the past year with 15 or more years of service were cited.

As City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said during the program, "From the smallest task to the largest project, the ef-
